YACKETY
YACK
1989

University of North Carolina
Volume IC

To capture the year — its sights and its insights — was our goal. Of course we could not depict the experiences of each of the 23,000 students, so we looked at the collective. What Carolina students saw, what they felt, what they knew.

But in the wake of the late delivery of the 1988 books, the criticisms of the Yackety Yack abounded. So we took some time to look at what we do now and what the Yack staffs have done in the past. The following is taken from the 1967 Yackety Yack when the cost of the yearbook was included in student fees and every student received a book.

We think it applies now.

The 1966 Yackety Yack closed with the words, "And so, if one should criticize the yearbook, let him think what he can do for the Yack, not what it can do for him. It is in your hands, fellow students, more than anyone else's that the final success of the book depends, for without your assistance and support, all our industry in futile." Yet, very few students hearkened to these words: there were books ripped over cars, others torn in half, and still others left in the Yack office for posterity. Why was this done? Why was the Yack not accepted? Why was (and perhaps is) it a failure — or, indeed, was it a failure? Is it the students' fault for lack of aesthetic appreciation; is it the students' fault for lack of assistance and advice until it is hindsight; or is it the fault of the Yack staff, whose attempt at artistry sometimes places the book too "far out" for the average student and his interest?

The answer lies in a combination of these things. The students, first, are culpable for not desiring or accepting anything beyond the good, cleancut yearbook they knew at Podunk High School. It is rather difficult for a book to present copy, pictures or layout in an artistic manner when the recipient of the book cares for nothing but his own picture and the funny caption under the frat candid. Moreover, not only is an artistic annual off limits, but a truthful one is also. Even if the football team is not the best or Jubilee was not up to par, it seems to be the feeling of most that the obligation of the Yack is to praise them. This atmosphere, where any new idea is automatically a bad one, is not conducive to a successful Yackety Yack from any point of view. The yearbook is a pictorial and literary record, and a record is comment as well as fact.

The blame can also be placed on the student body for being, as it were, Monday morning quarterbacks. Though pleas have been made constantly for assistance, advice and criticism during the preparation of the book, these go unheard by the majority, while the Yack is almost forgotten. In May, however, far and wide is heard the cry that this is the worst yet, only when it is too late do most students voice their objections. This year the number of staff and secretarial volunteers from the student body has been excellent; yet, those who are most vituperative in their condemnation never seem to come down to the office to offer their services. If there was a genuine interest in improving the book according to their own standards, why have these students not come forth from the woodwork?

One cannot, however, point the finger at others without a certain degree of introspection. The Yack staff too often suffers from an acute superiority complex which is carried into the book; though sometimes, perhaps, not entirely unwarranted, it is not wise for the authors of a work representing the whole community to make that work the product only of their own tastes and preferences. It is true that one feels insulted by some of the things which must be included in the yearbook either from tradition or what the public wants, but there is no reason to conceive that book as a gross insult to the students. There is here the question of whether the artist should try and influence the taste of the community or whether he should cater to its present preferences; the answer, of course, is compromise.

There are then, several areas of friction which have scarred the Yackety Yack and led it to be, if not a failure, unaccepted. Perhaps the solution is putting the book on a subscription basis; for then the Yack staff could publish what they felt was worthwhile, and the student who bought one would have only himself to blame if he disliked it. Yet, in this we again forget the average student — the one who would very much like to have a book, but would not be able to absorb the fivefold price increase. No, the solution does not lie here, but lies rather in an understanding between the Yack and the student body regardless of financial basis — an understanding that each year is a new and different year deserving a new and different book; an understanding that the challenge of the yearbook is originality; the understanding that both the University of North Carolina and its student body have matured and put away childish things, and that this maturity requires a record of equal worth; the understanding that there will be many changes — many trials and many errors — before the staff learns to present this new maturity; and the understanding that whatever is done is always with the best interest of the student in mind.

So the Yackety Yack has had its problems during its 99 years of existence. No doubt it will have problems in years to come. Until then, the staffs will continue to document the year at Carolina, hoping that when you look back at your college yearbooks, you will remember things you had forgotten. We have made our attempt at that goal; only time will reveal our level of success.

PERSPECTIVE

by Burton Davis

It was an unfair question to pose to a freshman. With only one short month of the university experience, I was being faced with a query from which doctoral dissertations are made — one which has generated debate, research and speculation since long before my conception and will still be unanswered long after my interment. The question: What is college and why are you here?

At first I scoffed at such a ridiculous question, an insult to my intelligence. I am here to . . . well, to learn and, um, college is a . . . well, a groovy place to do just that. Hardly an answer to awe the listener or, sadly, even the speaker. For I had realized that college is different in its composition and function depending on the individual. Not an earth-shaking or even unique revelation, but a personal triumph nonetheless. Here began my journey to discover my college, why I am here. The results are not in, the research not yet complete, so consider this the first entry in the travelogue of experience in a journey of self discovery.

I first encountered college as perceived through the university pamphlets acquired throughout one's high school career. This was the romantic college of Socratic method and heated philosophical debate under the Davie Poplar. Rarely absent in the college viewbook is the picture of a few students sprawled nimbly in the grass listening intently as a graying professor imparts the glory of Einsteinian Physics as a post-surrealist art movement. Perhaps this appealed to some, though I always felt that the only result of this scenario would be a tuition hike to finance new buildings so classes could be held in real rooms.

Later as my college days grew closer, I harbored deep within the recesses of my mind the hunger pangs of the repressed pseudo-intellectual. College was, then, the place where professors of national renown and eternally intense students would gather in subterranean bistros to tackle the problems of bourgeois values and their domination of American society. While decked out in only my most worn black turtleneck I would argue over the influence of sexual frustration on the twentieth century Metaphysical poetry, Renaissance, or rural Wyoming and Montana. Eschewing traditional values, I would write bad ideological pamphlets while farming the Yukon Territory naked using pre-historic tools. However, this lifestyle became less than ideal when I found out that black turtle necks really do not look good on me and the Montana Metaphysicals are only relevant in Trivial Pursuit.

With two possibilities down already, I was desperate to find "college" and my place in it. Not only that, but I also had to find a "college" which was into my color scheme, namely pastels. Two weeks into the school year, my savior seemed to call from the general area of Franklin Street and Frat Court. Brotherhood, parties and vivid clothing: the Greeks seemed to have it all, but soon I found that this road, like its predecessors, was a dead end. The time and financial commitment were difficult enough, but the real obstacle was beer. Although not yet of the recommended minimum age for drinking, I must admit that I have imbibed on occasion, in a strictly experimental setting. The results: beer has the remarkable effect of putting me to sleep. I am also convinced that there is an international conspiracy to cover up the fact that beer is not an acquired taste; it really does taste like liquified cedar shavings.

The frustration of failure and an extra burden of actual classwork has postponed my search for now, and I must content to drift aimlessly in Universipur-gatory. Until my revelation, I will concentrate my efforts on acquiring the es-sentia skill of deep sleeping. This pursuit is easier than the others because I have much help from my roommates who provide me with opportunities to practice not being awakened at four in the morning when they stumble in drunk. It looks like my "college" search will last four years. If it does not, I will be disappointed.

This is not a Grateful Dead story. Nor is it another worn-out rehash of the Sixties. I'm not going to talk about Peace, or Love, or any of those other twisted relics of a righteously forgotten era. That stuff is long gone. This is the Eighties!

Right?

So what's with all the tie-dyes? You've probably seen as many of them as I have. And you've probably noticed the people wearing them. You know the people I'm talking about. "Undesirables." Girls in certain sororities. Guys with short hair and BMWs, the type you wouldn't want hanging around your kid sister. That's the real shocker. I mean, there have always been plenty of dyes around — you just had to know where to look. But that's all changed. This new crowd is upfront, casual, even blatant about it. It's almost as if . . . as if they are PROUD to be wearing dyes!

I had this theory, see, that such overwhelming numbers must mean Something Big. So I checked it out. Did some digging. Ran down some leads. Watched a lot of PM Magazine.

That's when I found it. A couple of entrepreneurs in Brooklyn had started turning out shirts, denim jackets, even designer jeans — all of them dyed in a very loud fashion. PM Mag.'s crack team of investigative journalists hit the story hard. These guys had practically cornered the market, they said. And the dyes were selling big. Real big.

Some guys would have left it at that. Not me. I had to know, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that all this was for real. Never mind what the radical fringe at PM Magazine said. I needed proof, cold, hard evidence, that this insidious trend had penetrated even to the American heartland.

I went to my most reliable source, a newspaper with its finger clamped tightly to the pulse of mainstream white bread, Top-40 America. A respectable paper, with not even a hint of controversy or rebellion. "Surely," I thought, "this will never make The Daily Tar Heel." I was wrong. Dead wrong. It was all there in black and white. My worst fears were confirmed.

Deifell

"Tie-Dyes Are In Fashion."

"Why?" is a good question. Let's have a look at some of the answers, shall we?

First of all, it could be part of this huge Sixties revival thing, which I said I wouldn't talk about. 'Nuff said.

Maybe people got tired of that Benetton trash and decided to wear some other obnoxious piece of clothing for a change.

Perhaps they're all looking for a spot as Nancy Reagan's new resident ex-junkie.

I'm not going to mention the Grateful Dead angle either. Well, maybe just a little bit. My survey population was evenly divided between Heads and others. The only difference between the two was regarding the brightness of the colors. Most Dead aficionados had a marked aversion to dyes that "jump out and hiss at you."

Few people, of course, actually came out and admitted that the reasons I've listed are the correct ones. They masked the truth with cheap evasions and trickery. Two of the most common excuses were "I like them" and "I think they're cool." Sure you do. It takes more than that to pull the wool over my eyes. Heather Mathews of Princeton, N.J., claimed that, for her, "it used to be a political thing, but not anymore." That one confused me for a moment.

Bruce Loth, a Sigma Chi from Carrboro, gave a rather disturbing reason. "It puts me in the mood," he whispered through clenched teeth. "Mood for what?" I wondered. Whatever it is, it's probably a felony.

If all these people have suddenly decided that they want to wear tie-dyes, then I suppose I'm in no position to stop them. Not that I'd want to, you understand. I just wish they'd take another look at their reasons. Noted fashion critic Susan McCracken once said, "People should be aware of what it stands for; that it is an art form and not just something cutesy to wear." You know, I think she's got something there.

Once in a while, you get shown the light in the strangest of places. If you look at it right.

Get my drift?

ESSAY

by Chris Kridler

Technically, I should have five advisers. I'm not kidding.

Granted, I'm still counting my General College adviser, plus there are my journalism adviser and my honors advisers, and two ghostly advisers for my double major in English — an English adviser and an Arts and Sciences adviser. I think.

If you go to school here in Chapel Hill, you know exactly what I mean. This is a place where red tape can eat you alive if you're just trying to buy a bagel. Think about it. You get your bagel, you take your meal card to the cashier, and somehow the card has been erased by an electromagnet or your keys or something — and then you can't buy your bagel, or they say you stole someone else's card, and they certainly send you upstairs in Lenoir to fight with some more red tape.

Meanwhile, you're late to your appointment with your fifth adviser. This adviser forgot to tell you that you've taken two non-Western historical perspectives and one Western instead of vice versa, and because of this, you not only won't graduate on time, but that other history course that you thought you dropped is turning into an F on your report card.

That is, if you get you report card. Because somewhere out there, a ghostly librarian says that the book you signed out about three months earlier still hasn't been returned. But you did return it. Maybe it has something to do with the gate at the library beeping wildly as you went through it, embarrassing you even though it was obvious that you weren't carrying any books.

This isn't a fantasy. And although it's a nightmare, this red tape hell is happening all around us. The advising system is a good one to investigate first. It works quite well — but only if you know exactly what you're doing, and therefore don't actually need an adviser.

Take the case of a friend of mine who has been bumped from adviser to adviser after returning to school after a year off. She has enough credits to be considered a senior and is planning to graduate this year, but wasn't given an adviser who could tell her what she needed to graduate — because in spite of the dozens of people she's approached, no one could change her status from "junior" to "senior." Now she finds that she'll be two credits shy of graduating, barring an error in her favor.

Waiting for shots

Errors, however, never seem to happen in anyone's favor. Everyone has a bureaucracy horror story to tell. Just among the people I know I've heard several that give me shivers — such as the girl who was mysteriously erased from the computer. That sort of thing means that you simply don't exist. You don't live in the dorms. You're not in any classes. You don't eat here. You're a vapor in a computer chip. Period.

Oh the indignity of it all — the frustration of going from building to building, from person to person, everyone sure that the next guy is going to have some answers for you. Do you ever clock how much time you spend tramping from one extremity of the campus to the other? Or better yet, how long you wait in lines on a particular day?

I timed my stay in several lines one day. Among financial aid, the cashier, the bookstore, Lenoir (and oh, isn't that worth waiting for?) and waiting for the elevator in Morrison, it came to about four hours. And I'm probably forgetting something. I could have written a short story, seen a movie, had several meals, gone to four classes or actually done some reading!

Is there a solution to this mess? Probably not. The bigger any bureaucracy and the more money it has, the more it feels it must protect its constituents from themselves. But there are a few steps that could make life easier for all of us.

Life between classes

First, the University should better inform academic advisers so that they can better inform students. The perspective system is a jungle, and if you're unable to majoring, the only way to really figure out what you're doing is to make your way through the underbrush yourself.

Allow students to have advisers who actually know something about their majors. Give advisers the power to cut through some of the red tape. Give advisers the power to cut through some of the red tape that's strangling the students — after all, usually the only human part of the machinery that students confront face-to-face is their adviser. The adviser hears the sob stories and knows what's going on. A simple call should be enough to clear up some of the problems, instead of students hiking all over campus with books of regulations and forms in triplicate in tow.

Second, the school should strive for efficiency in every respect. For instance, why not put the financial aid office in the same building as the cashier — or even the same line? It shouldn't be too difficult to consolidate operations so that one trip does the trick. And why not hire a few extra people to run all of the teller windows at the cashier during the first few weeks of the semester? It would save lots of people time and money — that refund check could be gathering interest in the bank.

Third, reevaluate all the rules that help and hinder us. Rules accumulate over time. Someone sees a flaw and introduces a regulation to fix it. The problem is lack of vision — no one sees the big picture, and contradictions and superfluous steps are built into the system. An overhaul of every arm of bureaucracy on campus could only streamline operations and save time and money in the end.

My last admonition is to all of the overworked cogs in the University machinery. Please remember that most students wouldn't lie about the fact that their name has been spelled wrong on a third of their mail since they enrolled in UNC-CH. And they have been to Hanes and Bynum and Vance and no one seems to know why it's spelled in such an exotic way, even though everyone claims to have fixed it.

I wouldn't lie about such a thing. Honest. I just don't want to be called "Christine" on my diploma.

Essay

by Chris Kridler

The wind and color of autumn, my favorite season, remind me of what I always thought college should be. I remember reading my favorite novels in high school — always out of class — and thinking about the time when I would be able to study them at a university, that haven of knowledge and learning, of wisdom and thought, of ivy-covered buildings, men in tweed jackets and women in plaid skirts walking among golden leaves on shadowed pathways.

It saddens me to think that image was mostly just that, an image, a dream of what college really would be like. The moments I anticipated have been too few, but fortunately, I've had a few excellent classes and teachers who have dared to encourage what even fewer students want — thought.

Thought! There's a word that's lost its punch. Very little thinking is encouraged in the world around us, and it's cliché, even wrong, to blame the lack of thought on television or rock music or a Lenoir fast-food diet. All have their merits — or at least the first two do.

Morrah

But the fact remains that there are a lot of students going to school here who didn't come here to learn in the first place. They came because they wanted to get a job, because everyone else with their grades and income was going and it seemed like the thing to do, because their parents and grandparents had gone here and they liked the idea of a third generation of family football fans picnicking before every home game.

And when these students get into a class that challenges them, their first reaction often is to blame the teacher for their failure to understand what's going on (i.e., failure to read and actually think about the readings and lectures) or to simply adopt a kind of cynical attitude that is the most disheartening thing I've encountered in my fellow students.

I was angered by a particularly strong example of this stylish cynicism early this semester. I had just come from the first day of an unexpectedly fantastic class. The teacher showed great enthusiasm, offered challenging ideas and interacted with students in the most positive way — he assumed they had the intelligence to understand him while he still encouraged questions. Later that day, as I waited in line at the University Cashier, I heard someone behind me describing that very class — and sarcastically ripping it to shreds for the very reasons I enjoyed it. Why, I wondered, are enthusiasm and ideas suddenly passe? How can anyone who goes into a class with a closed mind really call himself or herself a "student"?

That doesn't mean that students have to bury themselves in books — in fact, just the opposite. As the Zen saying goes, "The student must learn to waste time conscientiously." The ideas we absorb in classes are to be found — and explored — in every aspect of our "normal" lives. It's true that we can't just think without feeling, without communicating with the people around us. But we also can't feel without thinking — without understanding.

Ignorance is the bane of our culture. It is at the root of all discrimination against and persecution of people and ideas not only here in the United States, but in the rest of the world. Whether being a world power was an accident of misfortune or fortune, it would also be nice if the good ol' USA could also be a leader in understanding, wisdom, knowledge and compassion. Without education, we are nothing.

And without students in the purest sense of the word, there is no education. Thought has to start with someone out there who never bothered to wonder before — someone who suddenly takes time to marvel at the subtlety of a scene from Hamlet, to appreciate the discipline that goes into a meticulous calculus equation, to question a long-held viewpoint in the face of a new and exciting critical approach, to enjoy the legends and myths of another culture.

Or, if you're lucky, that spark may alight in you — when you scan the color of autumn foliage against the blue sky, or when you read your favorite novel while sitting on a wall in the sun, next to a shadowed pathway strewn with crimson and golden leaves.

UNIVERSITY DAY

Chancellor Paul Hardin's acceptance speech, October 12, 1988:

The fifteen weeks leading up to this installation ceremony have been busy and rewarding ones for me. I have immersed myself in the University and sought to learn all I could about what is going on here. Of course, that learning process will never end, but today seems an appropriate time for us to begin to discuss the future.

In the complex and highly competitive world of public higher education, the future belongs to those institutions and persons who command it, not to those who wait passively for it to happen. Today, in these few minutes, I'd like to offer for your present reaction and later discussion some of the steps which I think we must take and principles we must follow if our University is to command the future.

First, we must honor our roots and support the noblest traditions of the University.

We shall shortly begin our observance of the bicentennial of the University of North Carolina. This will be a season in which we remind ourselves of our roots and traditions. I have already begun to read and listen to the history of UNC. My mentors are people like Albert Coates, Arnold King, William Powell, William Friday, the former chancellors, Gillian Cell, John Sanders, Douglass Hunt, Bill Cochrane, Doug Dibbert, and Bill Massey. I cannot possibly read the materials as quickly as they provide them, but I am trying.

History tells us that the University has deep roots in the soil and in the people of North Carolina. In the words of Chancellor Fordham just eight years ago, "This sense of fundamental identity is an important base for the quality and character which have evolved here." As we strive successfully for expanding national and international recognition, we must not forget either our indebtedness or our continuing obligation to the State and to its people who nourish and take great pride in the University. One tangible expression of that indebtedness is to be sure that no student of this state is denied access to the University by reason of financial circumstances. Another is to continue to strengthen the extension or outreach services of the University.

History records UNC's commitment to other important values which we must sustain if we are to be true to our roots and our noblest traditions. We cannot emphasize too urgently our determination to be sure that this University remains a robust market place of ideas. Our great State flinched during the 1960s, and, in the words of Dr. Arnold King, the University of North Carolina was "held hostage to the Speaker-Ban law for five years." That must never happen again, and I am sure that it will not happen under any present or fairly foreseeable executive or legislative leadership of North Carolina.

So, if we are to command the future, we must honor our roots and support the noblest traditions of the University.

If we are to command the future, we must also plan for it, working as a community to set and achieve important University-wide priorities as well as the priorities of our individual schools and colleges.

This planning process has been well begun but needs sharpening because of the coming of new leadership and the pendency of a major financial campaign to coincide with the bicentennial observance. We must evaluate programs, personnel and facilities in order to ascertain present strengths and meet future needs. Whether in a particular instance we are seeking State appropriations or private gift support, or a combination of the two, we must be sure that our requests are well-reasoned and clearly supportive of our three-fold mission of vital teaching, cutting-edge research and distinguished public service. Our aim must be excellence in all three of those endeavors. Our planning must have the broadest practical participation, and this community already knows that I like audacious ideas.

In our personnel planning I shall be pushing all of us to make our faculty and administration more inclusive of women and minority persons—at all ranks. You have heard me say before that I do not see affirmative action as a set of steps one follows to comply with the law, but as a process we follow in order to make ourselves whole.

Speaking of audacious ideas, try this one: Over the period of our bicentennial observance, normal attrition will create between 200 and 250 faculty openings here. Let's reverse the well-publicized brain drain and go out and steal 20 or 30

And Not to Establish a University in the State of New York.

Whereas in all well regulated governments it is indispensable that every Legislature should be the support of the sacred duties of life, by giving the highest order to the education.

And whereas a University supported by private funds will certainly have the most direct tendency to secure the progress.

Be it therefore enacted by his Honor the Governor of the State of New York that the sum of $100,000 be appropriated to the establishment of a University in the State of New York.

superstars. Here is a novel strategy which might work and is surely worth a try.

Let's identify senior scholar/teachers throughout the United States, and even overseas, who are natives of North Carolina. I have a hunch that there are many such who grew up here but migrated out of the State and established themselves elsewhere. We will find that women and blacks constitute a significant portion of that universe, however large or small it may be. Let's find the strongest persons who meet this description, go to see them and tell them to "Come home. All is forgiven!" Even though they are happy Where they are and have given no thought to returning to North Carolina, they might suddenly discover that the prospect is exciting.

Why do I think this may be feasible? Because that is precisely what happened to me. I had no idea UNC was even searching for a chancellor. I was perfectly happy where I was, and it was inconvenient to leave. Someone had to seek me out and tell me that I really entertained a secret desire to return home to North Carolina. I would like to get on a plane and try to recruit by telling that story and by telling our prospects that UNC is determined to make a great leap forward during the bicentennial season and would like them to be a part of this novel but perfectly serious effort to build a faculty second to none in the nation, either in competence or diversity.

Rushing on now, we have suggested that, in order to command the future, UNC must build on its roots and noblest traditions and must plan cooperatively and systematically to meet its program, personnel, and facilities needs. There are three further points to be introduced today.

If we are to command the future, we must strengthen our key partnerships.

The first key partnership which comes to mind is our partnership with sister institutions of higher learning, especially the other universities within the Research Triangle. We shall be open both to initiate and receive suggestions for further creative collaboration to help our State, our corporate

Doing the activities

Morrah

Chancellor Hardin slices his cake

neighbors and our own universities realize the full potential of that remarkable geographic and missional configuration.

A second key partnership links us with our host communities of Chapel Hill, Carrboro and Orange County. With the completion of I-40 that partnership should expand to include Hillsborough. Chapel Hill is probably the best known and most admired college town in the United States. Its special character helps define this University; this university largely shapes Chapel Hill. We must work together to solve problems relating to parking, transportation, affordable housing and other mutual concerns. We must also be sure that major plans are not advanced without significant community discussion.

If we are to command the future, we must work well and imaginatively with the General Administration and the Board of Governors.

Any objective observer, I believe, would agree that the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has made remarkable progress in recent years, as a part of the modern, multi-campus University of North Carolina. As a North Carolinian who has been away for 20 years, I am also impressed by the recent progress of other constituent institutions. I look forward to working with my fellow chancellors, the General Administration, and the Board of Governors to make a good system even better.

Although we were greatly encouraged by the recent rankings of national universities in U.S. News and World Report, one aspect of those rankings was disquieting. In our category, we ranked third among public universities. However, when both public and private universities were counted, we ranked 23rd! It is most interesting to note that the two public universities which ranked ahead of UNC, The University of Virginia and UCLA, belong to systems permitting substantially more flexibility and autonomy than our system allows in North Carolina.

Permit me to tell a true story about my time in New Jersey and to extract from it a cautious moral. This is really a North Carolina story — which happens to be set in New Jersey. After Governor Thomas Kean was inaugurated, his first commencement address was given at Drew. He came early at my request. As we walked the campus, I respectfully suggested that he might borrow a higher education initiative from North Carolina and establish one or more Governor's Schools. Small World department: Dr. Sam Magill, Ph.D. from UNC, President of Monmouth College in New Jersey, had made exactly the same suggestion to Governor Kean based on his knowledge of the North Carolina scene. Sam and I had not conspired. This was a chauvinistic coincidence.

Chairs

Governor Kean was and is impressed by North Carolina's leadership in higher education. Within two years there were three Governor's Schools in New Jersey, fully funded by the State, two of the three located at independent institutions presided over by two North Carolinians.

Governor Kean did not limit his higher education leadership to the establishment of Governor's Schools. In cooperation with Chancellor Edward Hollander and the Legislature, he also introduced substantial autonomy into the state colleges and universities of New Jersey. His reforms included the elimination of line item budgeting and release of the colleges from the state civil service restrictions which were making it difficult for those institutions to compete with the private sector.

Governor Martin, Lieutenant Governor Jordan, Chairman Jones, President Spangler: No administrative team will work harder than the team in South Building to make the present system work as well as possible. And in that commitment we have the full support of our Board of Trustees. At the same time, let me assure you that the energies and resources of our campus are available to study what other states are doing in order to improve the competitive position of their public institutions while retaining and even strengthening accountability for all appropriated funds. Our common aim is and must be full accountability to the taxpayers. If we find that more flexibility will enable us to achieve higher levels of effectiveness and give the taxpayers better value—"more bang for the buck"—I trust we in North Carolina will be as willing to learn from the successful ventures of other states as Governor Tom Kean of New Jersey was willing to learn from North Carolina just seven years ago.

There is a sequel to the New Jersey story. When my coming here was announced, Governor Kean said to me, "Paul, I think you are going to the best job in higher education in this country." I agreed with that and agree now. If no change is made along the lines I've suggested, I'll work hard, with others, to make Carolina stronger.

There is no proposal on the table at this time. Our channels are through our president and the Board of Governors.

Finally, if we are to command the future, we must be passionately committed to our mission.

In my first brief comments to the Board of Governors last spring, I declared that I have a passion for higher education. Through the good offices of Professor Albert Coates I have found precedent for speaking so strongly of our mission. President Edward Kidder Graham once referred to the extension programs of the University as "the radiating power of a new passion," to take our culture to "all parts of the body politic."

Our beloved University, almost 200 Zyears old, has not just survived for two centuries; it has become one of the major research universities in our nation. Let's not be blase about that. Think what we do at Carolina. We work with skill and dedication to discover knowledge. We share that knowledge by our publications and by vital teaching, here on campus and throughout the state. We also engate actively in the application of knowledge to enhance the quality of life for humankind, especially within this State, but also throughout the nation and world. We have not come to this University Day in order to celebrate a pastel public university. We must honor our founders by painting, as they did, with bold colors. A future which exceeds their wildest imaginings awaits. Let us command it!

Essay

by Clark Aycock

Halloween is a holiday I outgrew rather quickly. Why? For one, I always lacked good costumes.

During my brief stint as trick-or-treater, I used two basic costumes. I was either Spiderman or a scurvy pirate. I had a neat Spiderman mask. The only problem with it was that it had very small nose holes and no mouth hole (to get that real Spiderman effect). The result was that I had a hard time breathing, and kind parents offered me Primatene Mist at the door. Parents would say things like, "Oh, look, what a cute wheezing Spiderman," or "Hey, Doris, I've seen this episode before. This is where Green Goblin threw that choking powder at Spidey. That's pretty good, kid, here's a few bucks."

"Presidential" candidates

To say the least, the swashbuckling pirate action got boring rather quickly. The costume consisted of a hat, a cape and me not bathing for a couple of days (which was easy to do as a kid) to achieve that real dirty, seafaring look.

Another thing that kind of ruined Halloween for me was when they started X-raying candy for razor blades and things like that. Thinking about a razor blade makes you worried of even the simplest things, even candy corn. Actually, come to think about it, I probably would have been excited to find something in my candy. It would kind of spruce things up. But, really, I don't think Chinese throwing stars make for good roughage.

Lobsters

Later on in my early years, I got smart. I decided I would let my brother and sister go out and do the footwork and then I would steal their booty — just like the scurvy pirate. Ahoy, maties!

So what was a typical Halloween encounter like? I'd go out trick-or-treating (mostly getting treats) at night — not in the day like some of those sissies nowadays. The people would be expecting me, of course. I made the rounds every year. "Here comes that Aycock kid again. Yeah, that's him, can't you tell. He's been wearing that pair of brown bell-bottom corduroys for five straight days now."

Knock, knock, knock.

"Trick or treat."

"Oh what a cute little . . . boy, yes, boy. You scared me. Who is that behind that . . . that . . . Zorro costume? Here, take some sugar-coated razor blades. Yum, yum,"

After depleting the candy stock of many an adult around my neighborhood, I would visit my elementary school's Halloween Carnival. This fiesta was located in my school's gym. So it was perfect in that it smelled like something dead. At the Halloween Carnival I would amaze people with my nifty costume, try with extreme futility to pop balloons for stupid prizes and take a sledgehammer to an old car. Such fun (according to my mom) that I needed to go home and go to bed.

Of course, being so excited from all the candy and running about in the gym, it took me a good two or three hours to go to sleep. The next day, I was sick from the speedy ingestion of carious and sundry candies. I not only had my plunder, but my brother's and sister's — they didn't count their candy like I did, so it was easy — and the candy my parents had not given away.

Boy, was I happy and rambunctious for a good couple of days. I ate everything from those damn Heath bars (they're too hard) to the wonderful candy corn. I had Snickers, Milky Ways, Reese's peanut butter cups, Zero bars (yuck), Clark bars (yeah!), granola bars (gave 'em to my parents), loads of Hershey kisses, candied apples to get my mouth sticky and plenty of other goodies.

Yeah, Halloween is a thing of my youth, and youth is innocence. It's the belief that what you do is so cool and trendy, and above all, neato. Only when you think about it 10 years later, you see how childish and stupid it really was. But, hey, that's what childhood was for. Halloween is a way to experience that playfulness and childlike innocence again. Pretending to be someone you're not. It's a nice reminder.

So dress up and go out to Franklin Street on Halloween night and just revel in it, and if you see a wheezing Spiderman on Franklin, please don't offer him any Primatene Mist, although some money (or candy) would be nice.

PROTESTS

The following is Steven Sullivan's closing statement given to the Undergraduate Honor Court on September 29, 1988. Sullivan was brought in front of the Honor Court as a result of participation in a protest at the Career Planning and Placement Service in Hanes Hall by the CIA Action Committee on April 15, 1988. The CIAAC was protesting CIA recruitment at the University.

"There's a history of the CIAAC's actions being presented and perceived by both the press and the University population at large as being coercive and even violent despite the fact that to date, every one of the group's actions have been thoroughly discussed and planned in accordance to non-violent principles including that of free speech of our opponents. It is true that not every member of the CIAAC is devoted to the principles of non-violence as a way of life, that is, considering oneself a pacifist. But, realizing that many of our beliefs and actions have been so highly suspect to begin with, we as a group have been diligent in planning our actions in a way that is succinct, confrontational, and even dramatic but without ever denying the human integrity of those who oppose us.

"Interestingly enough, it has been our actions which have been by nature, completely pacifistic, which may have been both widely understood and misrepresented.

"Last year, in order to protest the CIA recruiting on campus, I fasted for twenty days. I and the other fasters were acting in a way that expressed our anger and commitment to this issue as our uncompromising refusal to resort to violent means to achieve our end. Yet we were continually berated as being coercive. It became apparent at that time that it was our belief themselves and our politics that were under attack and not our expression of them, seeing that fasting has for so long served as one of the quintessential expressions of non-violent confrontation. Similarly, the protest at the University Inn which consisted of a symbolic spilling of blood on the sidewalk and a verbal confrontation outside of the Inn, was presented in the press as 'the CIAAC running the CIA out of town.' The fact is that the recruiter left of his own volition and this, once again, incensed those with a blind regard for authority and government.

"The Board of Trustees resolution immediately following, in which we were branded as 'violent terrorists,' was little more than an appeasement to the CIA and, in a true 'kill the messenger' manner, the more evident the complicity between the University and the CIA becomes, the more ugly and vehement the smear campaign against the CIAAC becomes . . .

"The action at the Career Planning and Placement office was carefully planned by the group in a way that would be neither disrespectful nor physically intimidating. Our purpose was to focus attention upon the University's relationship with the CIA and we did not intend to, nor in fact, did obstruct or interfere with the operation of the University. The apparent intimidation felt by certain office workers is more due, I believe, to their own misunderstanding of our action than anything we actually did. I did not at that time, nor do I now, consider a protest consisting of reading aloud documented CIA crimes or the singing of protest songs to be intimidating. Some of our arresting officers even expressed a desire to be a part of our sit-in, if it weren't for the fact that they were arresting us.

"I believe the fact of a trial here tonight was initiated by our politics and not the student honor code. The persecution of a small group of students, although unpleasant, is much easier to stomach than for each individual to realize that she or he is partly responsible for the continued presence on our campus of a government-sanctioned terrorist organization. I'm sure that certain members of the BOT should be delighted if we were found guilty. But, despite the outcome, I will always know that I, and the other members of the CIACC, acted in a way that was honorable. Millions have died because of the CIA's limitless ambition for power, and I have the knowledge that I said, 'NO,' in the best way that I was able."

by Laurie Chalk

The polls are closed. New student leaders are booting their predecessors out of the Union suites. For some, it is a sad time — fledgling political careers winding down. Admittedly, some of the past student regimes have been less than memorable. But not this time. The student leaders of this past year have, to some great extent managed to do what few politicians have done before — keep their campaign promises.

Take the "Martin Era," for instance. Student Body President Kevin Martin made significant strides on practically every one of his specific platform planks:

Establishment of minimum standards of English-speaking ability for teaching assistants. English classes designed to improve the speech of TA's have been started and will be expanded next fall. There are no mandatory standards in effect yet, Martin said, because "They had already accepted the ones for next year." Such requirements could be in place as early as the fall of 1990.

Consolidation of campus food services. Under Martin's direction, a committee has submitted a number of proposals in this area. Since the administration's Food Services Advisory Council has come up with similar suggestions, he is optimistic about the eventual success of his plans.

Increased communication with administrative officials. A Student Advisory Council now meets with Chancellor Hardin once a month to discuss student concerns. "That's not working out as well as I had hoped, though," Martin said. He is currently working to expand the program, however, by having a larger group meet regularly with the vice chancellor for student affairs in addition to the current conferences with Chancellor Hardin.

Coordination of minority affairs. Kevin had originally planned to set up an administrative position to reach this goal. Instead, he worked with the chairman of the Minority Concerns Committee to restructure the committee. According to Martin, "It's more representative now of the minorities within the student body."

Only on one point did Martin's campaign platform fall through. He pushed for a cooperative education program that would allow students to alternate going to school and working to earn money for their expenses. Although the program looked at first as if it might be successful, the administrative liaison left for another position within the University, and the plans fell apart. "We all just got discouraged on that one. I think some of it had to do with the lack of continuity (changeover in students and, in this case, staff). It was also just bad luck," Martin said.

Senior Class President Steve Tepper and his staff also left a bright legacy. Again, he was able to follow through on most of his campaign promises:

Establishment of an Alumni Outreach File. This file would bring together alumni with job openings and seniors

sign supporters

who need them. The data base for the actual file is on tap for this spring, but a career fair was held last fall in Charlotte to connect students with interested alumni.

Enactment of a 'senior ambassadors' program. "We've already had about 15 or 20 seniors go out into communities and talk about the University," Tepper said. This program too is slated for expansion.

Continuation of senior blocks, trips and bar nights out. Seniors received first shot at Duke basketball tickets, and a host of commencement activities are planned. Several area bars are participating in the "Senior 200" competition and holding special parties for seniors only.

Offerings of small senior classes outside of majors. "We weren't able to get any academic classes," Tepper said. However, senior seminars on such topics as wine tasting, financial investments, and automotive maintenance have been started. "The problem with this idea is the lack of resources. Not many professors want to teach a class for free."

Tepper accomplished many other projects in addition to these previously stated goals. The senior class brought home Carolina's charter, for example. Also, the class gift of a $500,000 endowed professorship will be the largest one in the country.

On to the "Jean Regime" at the Daily Tar Heel. Editor Jean Lutes outlined several goals during her campaign last year, and an astonishing number of them were met:

- Expansion of the DTH to Carrboro: Drop boxes are now available in the Carrboro area;

- Reports of local crimes: Both the University and Chapel Hill police reports are compiled into round-ups twice a week;

- Addition of concert previews, movie reviews, and area social events in the weekly Omnibus: Under Editor Cathy McHugh and Lutes, the Omnibus has expanded to include all these and more entertainment features.

Other noticeable changes were enacted. For instance, both state and national coverage are expanded, and every Monday the paper now includes two page for editorials and the popular "Sports Monday" extra.

All three leaders performed admirably at keeping their word and even going beyond it to improve their respective slices of campus life. Still, these three sometimes wish they could have accomplished a little more. "But you have so many immediate things to do when you take office. To maintain the programs already there is hard," Tepper said. As Martin said, "You have to be realistic about what you can do and keep a limited number of specific issues in the campaign."

No arguments about that. This year's successors have some big shoes to fill. Just one itty-bitsy complaint, though. Why can't the candidates ever be a little more creative with their campaign promises? "A thousand cans of beer," maybe. Or how about, "A kinder, gentler University?"

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA

FOUNDED 1789

Essay

by Gene Davis

When considering the first two hundred years of the University of North Carolina, one must, by necessity, delve into the proud history of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies. Having been founded only four months after the first student, Hinton James, arrived in Chapel Hill, the Societies are the oldest student organizations on campus.

From nearly the founding of these Societies, both the Di and Phi charged their members with "making appropriate laws for the regulation of its activities." The Societies then enforced these laws as they applied to their individual members. In effect these were the self-imposed laws of all students, in as much as the Board of Trustees required every student to be a member of the Societies up until 1895. For this reason, the Societies were seen as the first student government and the first Honor Court. From this noble tradition of student self-governance, the student government and Honor Court arose in 1901.

One of the first actions of the Societies was the purchasing of books and the establishment of libraries. The University's library being inadequate, each Society began its own library to serve the students in their quest for knowledge. This allowed for friendly competition between the Di and Phi in searching for more and better volumes for each library. By 1895, each of the Societies had a library stocked with over ten thousand volumes. Eventually, however, the Di and Phi turned over those volumes to the University Library whose official name is "The Library of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill endowed by the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies." Today, as one glances through the books in the library, one can most certainly find that many of the present collection were endowed by the Societies.

The Di and Phi have also served an instrumental role in the molding of the curriculum at the University. For example, the Societies were the first to call for the establishment of a law, medical and pharmacy school. As needs arose among the student body for additional classes, the Societies worked to meet those needs through the creation of classes in music, journalism, American history and social science.

The impact of the societies on the student's lives can be seen in the building of New East and New West to serve as chambers, offices, libraries and dorm rooms for the Phi and Di respectively. These two buildings were solely funded by the Societies. Furthermore they created the University Magazine that was the forerunner to the The White and Blue that eventually merged with the Tar Heel. In addition, both Societies began to solicit portraits of distinguished alumni and others who represented their ideals. Today, the Societies claim ownership over the single largest portrait collection in the State.

The most visible impact the Societies have had on the University can be seen at any Carolina Basketball game or simply by walking into a gift shop on Franklin Street — the school colors. Each Society had its own color representing something unique about that society. The Di first placed bright blue ribbons on the diplomas of those graduating members to represent honor and excel-

ce. The Phi followed suit by choosing white ribbons signifying truth and virtue. When intercollegiate football came along in the 1880s the team members desired to have school colors like the other teams against which they competed. The overwhelming majority of team members were also members of the Di Phi, so they quite naturally adopted the light blue and white of the Societies.

Today, the Societies still exist. Theators, as they are known, still roam the chambers of the Di and Phi located on the top floors of New West and New East. The members are proud of the history of both the Societies and University. They meet once a week to debate and generally promote knowledge among students. They have a distinguished list of Alumni members that includes President James K. Polk, Vice President William King, Thomas Wolfe, Governor John M. Morehead, Governor Charles B. Aycock, Professor Albert Coates, Thomas S. Kenan, Frank Porter

Graham, and many others.

Two hundred years of student involvement and student self-governance is found in the historic chambers of the Di and Phi. These Societies have significantly impacted this University and will continue to provide a student voice and student action amidst the apathy which seems to pervade the campus community. Virtus, Libertas, et Scientia — Virtue, Liberty, and Knowledge . . . The Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies.

UNC ranked third among publics

UNC was ranked third among public universities and 23rd overall among 204 national universities in a U.S. News and World Report survey on "America's Best Colleges." Last year, UNC ranked 11th overall in the same survey.

The criteria used to determine the rankings were different in 1989 from the previous year, therefore comparing the surveys is impossible, said Betsy Bauer, editor of the survey.

"This year's survey is so dramatically different, you can't possibly make comparisons," she said. "It would be like comparing football and basketball."

In past years, the rankings have been based on a survey of college and university presidents. In the 1989 ranking, the judgments of academic deans, admissions officers and objective rankings have been added, Bauer said.

The objective rankings — gathered mainly from The Annual Survey of Colleges, compiled by the College Board — include quality of a school's student body as determined by admissions selectivity, quality of its faculty, resources available for educational program resources and its graduation rate.

Among public universities, only the University of Virginia and the University of California at Los Angeles, ranked higher than UNC. UVA was ranked 20th overall and UCLA was 21st.

Four other North Carolina schools ranked in the survey. Duke was listed 12th among national universities, Wake Forest was ranked first among comprehensive colleges, Davidson College was 20th among national liberal arts colleges and Meredith College was 15th among small comprehensive colleges.

Students get fewer tickets

As the line of students clutching numbers representing their places in line for N.C. State basketball tickets snaked from the Smith Center ticket windows past Koury Natatorium Sunday, Carolina Athletic Association officers assured anxious fans that if they were among the first 1,000 in line, they could receive lower-level seats.

When lower-level student seats were gone after student number 555 picked up tickets, CAA officials were just as surprised as the hundreds of students still expecting lower-level seats.

Students were allocated about 1,100 lower-level seats for the N.C. State game, not including seats allocated to students spirit groups. This number was about 900 fewer seats than student leaders had been led to expect. Students had been told from the early planning stages of the Smith Center that they would receive about 2,000 lower-level seats.

ABC morning program airs live from UNC

People all over America woke up the morning of Nov. 3 to a Carolina blue sky, broadcast live from the UNC campus in Chapel Hill.

Although the weather was down-right chilly, ABC-TV shot portions of its morning new show "Good Morning America" live on the quad in front of Wilson Library from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m.

The UNC program, which focused on education on one important election issue during each broadcast and was broadcast from a different state each morning.

The series began broadcasting Monday from California with a show focusing on defense. Other shows highlighting defense issues and the nation's economy were shot from Texas and Illinois. On Friday the show, broadcast from Philadelphia, focused on the candidates' individual pet issues.

"We wanted to visit the South because it was targeted by the Democrats (as a crucial state in the election)," Gibson said. "With the focus of the show being on education, that brings us naturally to Chapel Hill."

The show began with an overhead view of the UNC campus, but because of audio difficulties, the voice-over was not heard.

The program included interviews with two UNC students, Dawn Siler, a junior from Graham, and Edgertib Coble, a senior from Hope, N.J.

Coble said appearing on national TV was exciting, but he wished he could have had more time to speak.

Chancellor Paul Hardin said he was pleased with the show but disappointed that audio difficulties disrupted much of the information about the University.

"Of course I was delighted that it was beamed from our campus," Hardin said. "I was very happy that it was a beautiful day on a beautiful campus," he said.

Hardin said his own appearance on a taped portion of the show would not cause him to consider career in television.

"I like where I am," he said.

Student activists sentenced to jail term

UNC graduate student Dale McKinley was sentenced on October 12 to serve 21 days in Orange County Jail for violating the terms of a "prayer for judgment continued" ruling he received in a January trial.

The sentence was automatically appealed, and McKinley had 10 days "to try to work something out" before he started serving his sentence.

Six students, including McKinley, were arrested Oct. 28, 1987, when they chained themselves together to block the entrance to rooms in Hanes Hall where CIA recruiters were conducting interviews.

On Jan. 14, 1988, Orange

County District Court Judge Stanley Peele entered a "prayer for judgment continued" on McKinley saying he was guilty of disorderly conduct but that he would not be sentenced or fined.

Under the terms of the ruling, the judge said he would not enter the convictions on their records unless they were convicted of another violation within a year.

In August 1988, McKinley was convicted of trespassing as a result of an April 15 protest in Hanes Hall against CIA recruitment.

Peele sentenced McKinley under the disorderly ruling.

McKinley said he was surprised that he was sentenced to a jail term. The sentence is too harsh for first offense on a disorderly conduct charge, he said. "I thought (the conviction) would just go on my record," he said.

"It's very disproportionate to the offense," he said. "It's not as though we did any damage."

The jail sentence, along with the conviction of five students in UNC Honor Court Sept. 29 as a result of the April 15 protest, will tend to silence protest, McKinley said.

"They're hitting us from all directions," he said. "They're trying to stifle dissent from University policy."

DTH 10/13/88

Budget cut forces drastic reductions

Many of UNC's student-oriented services were forced to cut back drastically on the use of materials and the hiring of new employees because of a $3 million cut in funding by the Office of Management and Budget in Raleigh, officials said.

The 5 percent cut, which was in effect from mid April until June 30, was the result of unexpected, large expenditures by some state organizations and decline in the state's revenue.

Cuts made to the University Libraries greatly affected students, said Larry Alford, assistant University librarian.

"All parts of the University (were) affected and forced to cut back. We drastically (reduced) several services that we supply."

One of the library services that was directly affected was the lending and borrowing between area libraries such as Duke University and N.C. State University, he said. Other services affected will be the supply of paper and books to CD-ROM and Infotrac system computers, the acquisition of new books and long distance phone calls, Alford said.

"Once we run out of paper we won't have any more. We will not be buying any more books for the rest of this fiscal year. If the books go over, they will be included in next year's budget."

"There's a great amount of concern about something like this happens," he said. "People pay their fees; I would be checked off if I paid my fees and research about the state legislature."

Reid goes pro; gives up last year of eligibility

Basketball player J.R. Reid announces his decision to enter the NBA draft after his third year playing for the Tar Heels.

Foster

On May 9, 1989, the UNC basketball program lost one of its most heralded players in recent history.

Junior forward J.R. Reid decided to pass up his final year of college eligibility, entering his name into the NBA's June 27 draft with some of the other big men on campuses around the country.

In doing so, Reid has given an already cloudy draft picture a subplot with more twists and turns than your average season-ending Dallas episode.

But while NCA executives will have plenty of film to watch in the next few weeks, the instant replay and the rerun go by the wayside on June 27. Whatever they do on that day, perhaps the most important of the year for an NBA franchise, is final. There are no second chances.

Example: The Portland Trail Blazers picked a Kentucky big man named Sam Bowie ahead of a blossoming your Tar Heel names Michael Jordan in the 1984 draft. Bowie has the distinction of being the only NBA player who has his name used with the word "rebound" only when it pertains to injuries, no basketballs. Meanwhile, Jordan has the distinction of being the best basketball player on the planet. Chicago is a dramatically improved team, while Portland has stagnated. Get the picture?

This year Reid joins Jordan and two other former Tar Heels as the only North Carolina players to opt for early entry in the NBA draft. Bob McAdoo was picked second in the draft in 1972, James Worthy was taken first in 1982 and Jordan was the third pick in 1984. Pretty tough company there.

Condom machines in dormitories

Condoms were installed in University residence hall bathrooms because of the growing danger of AIDS, said administrators and student leaders.

Alarming statistics about the rapid spread of AIDS make this issue one that affects the entire community as well as the state and nation, Student Congress Speaker Gene Davis said. "Because of the growing concern about AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, it is important for Student Congress to stand up in support of the only preventive device effective in thwarting the transmission of these diseases," he said.

The Student Congress bill advocating the condoms called for a machine in the first floor bathrooms of all residence halls, whether single-sex or coed.

While condoms previously were available in campus stores, including the Circus Room and South Campus convenience stores, a more private place to purchase condoms was needed, said Sue Gray, Student Health Service (SHS) director of health education.

Residence hall bathrooms provide convenience and privacy not found in snack bars and stores across campus, said Student Body President Brien Lewis.

"This is a private thing and should be dealt with as a delicate and private issue," he said.

Housing lottery cancelled due to lack of demand

For the first time in as long as anyone in the Department of University Housing can remember, enough spaces were available in the residence halls for every student who turned in a housing application. Therefore, no residence hall lottery was held.

The drawing was canceled because the housing department received 193 applications and had 1,293 spaces available. All students who submitted their applications to compete in the residence hall drawing or were unsuccessful in the preliminary drawings were assured a room in their current residence halls, Rustin said.

Student who did not request a specific room or requested a room number change were assigned a room by their area directors.

The new guaranteed sophomore housing policy was largely responsible for the difference between the number of available spaces and the students requesting space, Rustin said.

According to a data sheet compiled by the housing department, 2,592 freshmen were eligible for guaranteed sophomore housing. About 70 percent, 1,797 accepted the guarantee.

Rustin said he wished the University had started using this process three years earlier. "We haven't had that many people want to live on campus in the past three years," he said.

Measles vaccination a must for students

A UNC student who lived on campus contracted measles, causing large scale immunization of students and faculty in February.

Students who needed immunization and did not report to Woollen Gym to be vaccinated were not allowed to attend classes or to live in campus residence halls for 14 days after the latest case was reported, said Dr. Judith Cowan, director of Student Health Service (SHS). Without proper immunization, students could be withdrawn from the University, she said.

Between 10,000 and 13,000 students — nearly half of the student body — had to be re-vaccinated, said Daniel Reimer, health director of the Orange County Health Department.

Before the first case of measles was diagnosed at UNC in late January, SHS requested that students who had been immunized before the age of 15 months and who were from any of the 15 N.C. counties where measles cases had been diagnosed report to SHS for revaccination.

General Assembly approves gubernatorial veto with conditions

After years of debate, the N.C. Senate voted 41-6 in early March to give the governor veto power, but the bill won't take effect until Gov. Jim Martin's term ends.

An amendment was added to the veto bill stipulating it wouldn't take effect until Martin finished his term. The entire bill will go to the N.C. House of Representatives.

If passed, a conference committee of both houses will discuss and revise the bill before N.C. citizens have a chance to vote on the constitutional amendment. That vote may come as early as this November.

"There is a lot of popular support for a gubernatorial veto," Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Wake, said. "I would have voted for the bill even if the amendment wasn't added, but I believe that the issue should not be decided on personalities." Voters would vote for the veto on the basis of whether they liked or disliked Martin, he said.

The public generally thinks the governor doesn't have much power, said Sen. Wendell Murphy, D-Duplin.

"I voted for the bill because the majority of people feel the governor should have the veto power," he said. "They don't realize that Martin already has tremendous power."

But other legislators agreed with the provision restricting Martin's veto power. "I think it is probably better not to apply the bill to the sitting governor since it is already politicized by the Republicans," Sen. James Ezzell, D-Nash said. "Now it has become such a political issue that people believe Martin is impotent without it."

Other senators agree on the bill but oppose the added amendment.

"The bill should apply to Jim Martin," Sen. Howard Bryan, R-Iredell, said. "He has done more than any other governor to bring the legislation about. I think the general public would very strongly like to see him have the veto since he has been a key player in the debate."

"Sen. Ted Kaplan (D-Forsyth) introduced the amendment, interjecting politics into the debate by splitting the Senate down party lines," he said. "I think he was short-sighted and partisan." Kaplan stopped the debate after he introduced the amendment, Bryan said.

"I don't think that it will change the balance of power," he said. "While the General Assembly members concern themselves with regional and local opinions, Martin would be someone to represent the statewide view."

The six senators who voted against the legislation based their decision on a variety of reasons.

"After the amendment was tacked on, I didn't think it was right to approve it," Sen. "Fountain" Odom, D-Mecklenburg, said. "Martin campaigned strongly on it in his re-election campaign, and he should be given the opportunity to be the first to exercise it."

Sen. Robert Swain, D-Buncombe, said North Carolina doesn't need a gubernatorial veto unless the N.C. constitution is totally rewritten. "If we are going to change duties, then we need to start at ground zero instead of piecing things together," he said.

North Carolina was fine before the governor had veto power, and the balance between the three branches of government will diminish if he's given the power, said Sen. Ollie Harrington, D-Cleveland.

Several other amendments to the veto bill, including line items and redistricting veto policies, were also on the floor.

The line item amendment, defeated 35-13, would have given the governor power to veto individual sections of budget bills. The redistricting bill, defeated 36-11, would have allowed the governor to veto bills redrawing congressional districts, which will be revised in 1990.

Discretionary funds under fire

Pork-barreling, the allocation of state money for local projects and programs, has come under fire once again from House Republicans and some Democrats who claim the funds are unevenly distributed to districts represented by influential legislators.

The state House Democratic Caucus discussed pork-barrel spending last week but did not poll its 74 members on the issue, said Timothy Kent, executive assistant to House Speaker Joseph Mavretic, D-Edgecomb.

"The Republicans in the House and Senate have not been favored much with projects in their areas," said C.C. Cameron, head of the governor's budget office.

But lawmakers from both parties are divided on the issue of how to deal with pork-barreling because there is no strict definition of the practice.

"There is no consensus about what pork-barrel means," Rep. Anne Barnes, D-Orange, said.

Legislators who appease the leadership in the General Assembly tend to get special advantages with discretionary funds, Cameron said.

"There was always the claim that the former speaker (Liston Ramsey, D-Madison) kept people voting the way he wanted them to because he promised them projects," Cameron said.

One way to solve that problem is to create a greater turnover in the leadership, said Rep. David Diamont, D-Surry, House appropriations chairman. Pork-barreling was an important issue in the successful move by House Republicans and some Democrats to replace Ramsey with Mavretic.

But pork-barreling, as we know it, is uncertain, Diamont said.

Race relations tense in Robeson County

Political tensions have eased somewhat in Robeson County since last February, but the situation for minorities has not substantially improved, according to college students from the area.

N.C. Gov. Jim Martin ordered a special task force in February to look into alleged racial injustices in Robeson County, which is evenly divided between blacks, whites and Native Americans. The investigation followed an incident Feb. 1 in which Eddie Hatcher and Timothy Jacobs, who say they are members of the Tuscaroran faction of the Lumbee Indians, burst into a Lumberton newspaper office, took 17 hostages and demanded to speak to Gov. Martin. Hatcher and Jacobs released the hostages 10 hours later when the governor promised to establish the task force.

"There haven't been any noticeable changes (since the task force)" said Cedric Woods, a sophomore from Pembroke. "Time itself has caused the tensions to die down with the trial (of Hatcher and Jacobs) and everything. Their actions kind of brought about an awareness in the police force. The governor's task force came about more because of the publicity than anything else," Woods said.

"Nothing formal has changed," said Brian Brooks, a junior from Pembroke. "A lot of the tension has subsided."

The mood of the area is slightly more optimistic, said John Jacobs (no relation to Timothy), a senior from Prospect. "That the government proved that they wanted to look into where no one had before, brought about a little more positive outlook."

But one sophomore said she did not notice any differences in the attitude toward Native Americans. "Yeah, (discrimination) there," said Athol Locklear of Pembroke. "I guess you used to it. You'll walk into a store and know you're not wanted, or you'll go into a restaurant and get seated in the back."

"As far as the law system goes, I think it's crooked. Say, if it comes to stopping a white man or an Indian speeding, it's always the Indian who gets the ticket. I haven't seen any changes."

Legislature cuts UNC funds to balance budget

The Office of Management and Budget in Raleigh has cut more than $3 million from non-personnel state funding at UNC.

The budget cuts are a 5 percent across-the-board withholding of budgeted appropriations for all state institutions and agencies, said Marvin Dorman, deputy state budget officer.

UNC will lose $1.9 million from academic affairs and $1.3 million from health affairs, said Wayne Jones, UNC's vice chancellor of business and finance.

"The cut will obviously have a dramatic effect on the University, but the extent of the hardship will not be understood until later in the quarter."

The University first learned of possible budget constraints in December, when C.C. Cameron, Gov. Jim Martin's executive assistant for budget affairs, sent a memo to all state institutions saying the next two quarters would be tight, Dorman said. The third quarter runs from April 1 to June 30.

The University was told to set aside sufficient funds for its payroll and to monitor costs such as traveling, printing and purchasing new equipment, Dorman said.

The 5 percent cut was the result of unexpected, large expenditures by some state organizations and a decline in the state's revenue, he said. The state Medicaid program will run out of money in mid-June, forcing $20 million to be transferred to it, and North Carolina Memorial Hospital will not be able to return revenue to the state as it usually does. In addition, the state Department of Corrections has exceeded its medical budget by $4.5 million, Dorman said.

UNC's spending has also increased this year, he said. The University usually reverts about 5 percent of its budget to the state, but at the present rate will revert only 2 percent.

The state budget office expected March revenues this year to be lower than revenues from March 1988, but the decline was 30 to 32 percent more than expected, Dorman said.

In comparison, a 3 percent decline in May 1988 revenues led to a loss of $45 million, he said.

Because of a constitutional requirement, the state is required to plan for lower revenues and make efforts to balance the budget.

Tornado tears up Raleigh; 4 die, more than 150 injured

Tornadoes whipped through north-west Raleigh early Monday morning and continued into eight rural counties, causing extensive damage and killing four.

Two children in Wake County and a couple in Nash County were killed during the tornado episode. At least 150 people were reported injured.

Northwest Raleigh was hardest hit. Tornadoes touched down shortly after 1 a.m. Monday near Town Ridge Shopping Center on U.S. 70 and continued on a path 10 miles long and one-fourth mile wide to just south of Durant Road.

"The mayor has declared the area affected by the tornadoes in a state of emergency," said Betty Hargrove at the Office of Public Affairs.

Tornadoes later touched down in Nash, Franklin, Northampton, Halifax, Dare, Hyde, Pamlico and Currituck counties.

Robert Slade, assistant manager of Wake County, said Monday that he had a very preliminary estimate Monday morning of $15 million to $20 million in damage to Wake County.

Using this estimate, Raleigh mayor Avery Upchurch and the Wake County Board of Commissioners requested state assistance Monday morning, Slade said. State teams went throughout the affected areas Monday afternoon to get a better assessment of the damage, he said.

The federal government may provide disaster relief as well, he said.

"The team from the Federal Emergency Management Agency will be here at eight (Tuesday morning) to accompany our field people to determine any assistance that may be available from the federal government."

About 500 people are homeless, said Tom Hegele of the State Emergency Response Team. Fifty families will require long-term housing assistance because of the extensive damage to their homes, he said.

About one-third of the houses damaged were destroyed, Hargrove said.

Police allowed only those people with identification to go near their homes Monday morning to prevent looting.

As many as 15,000 homes were without power immediately after the storm, said Kyle Hampton, a Carolina Power and Light spokesman. Between 1500 and 1600 homes in Raleigh were still without power as of 6 p.m. Monday, he said. Power was to be restored to most of the homes Monday night.

But as many as 500 homes were estimated to be too damaged to have power returned without an inspection, he said. "Some homes are so heavily damaged they will have to be inspected by a building inspector before we supply them with electricity," Hampton said.

Raleigh officials concentrated on cleaning the streets of debris from fallen trees, broken glass and parts of houses to let traffic through, Hargrove said.

Welfare system gets overhaul

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Oct. 13 signed the first major overhaul of the nation's welfare system since it was created in the Great Depression. He said the new law was a "message of hope" to those mired in a life of dependency and destitution.

But that message to welfare recipients, said the president, also contains a demand from the citizens who pay the bills: "That you will do your share in taking responsibility for your life and for the lives of the children you bring into this world."

"For too long the federal government, with the best of intentions, has usurped the responsibility that appropriately lies with parents," said Reagan at the signing ceremony in the Rose Garden. "In so doing, it has reinforced dependency and separated welfare recipients from the mainstream of society."

Under the agreement reached after two years of legislative struggle, the government has pledged to provide training and support systems to destitute parents if they take steps to become independent.

Tower rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Thursday rejected the nomination of John Tower as defense secretary, 53-47, handing President Bush a major defeat in his high-stakes showdown with the Democratic-controlled Congress. The White House said Bush would act swiftly to submit a replacement nomination to the Senate.

Tower's nomination was scuttled by concerns about his drinking habits coupled with senatorial unhappiness that he left his government post as arms negotiator and quickly began earning hundreds of thousands of dollars as a defense industry consultant.

Tower, in a statement he delivered at the Pentagon moments after the vote, said, "I will be recorded as the first Cabinet nominee in the history of the republic to be rejected in the first 90 days of a presidency and perhaps be harshly judged."

"But I depart from this place at peace with myself, knowing that I have given a full measure of devotion to my country," Tower said.

Protestors evict Sen. Helms

Two former UNC students were arrested and charged with unlawful entry Friday after they staged a mock eviction of N.C. Sen. Jesse Helms' office to protest federal housing budget cuts, U.S. Capitol police said.

Amy Thompson, 22, a 1988 UNC graduate and Jerry Jones, 21, who did not return to the University this fall for his senior year, entered Helms' offices Friday morning along with Boston lawyer Stewart Guernsey, 37. They handed the office staff an "eviction notice" and moved furniture from the front office into the hallway for almost half an hour before police arrested them.

Through support for the Reagan Administration's cuts in federal housing programs and "general unconcern for the poor," Helms has been responsible for many citizens' evictions, Jones said in a telephone interview Saturday. "We wanted to reduce the distance between those who have a place to lay their heads at night and those who don't," he said.

The three housing activists work with Community for Creative Non-Violence (CCNV), which operates a shelter serving 1400 homeless daily in Washington, D.C.

Helms stayed in his office while the protest was taking place in the front offices and had no comment on the protest, press secretary Barbara Lukens said.

The protest was unjustified, Lukens said, because a unanimous Senate just re-authorized the McKinney Act, which includes provisions for housing, medical assistance and training for the homeless.

The McKinney Act is a good but inadequate emergency bill for the homeless, and does not solve the country's affordable housing crunch, Jones said.

"We are talking housing, not shelters," he said. "The reason there are so many homeless is that there is no housing because the federal government stopped spending money on housing."

Student-led protests in China prompt government intervention

BEIJING (AP) — China's leaders delayed a meeting set up to purge moderates from the government because top officials still are locked in a power struggle caused by the unrelenting student-led protests, sources said Tuesday.

A military source said the 200,000 troops surrounding Beijing have been told to "prepare for winter," meaning hardliners are anticipating a long battle with moderates.

Also on Tuesday, workers and students chanted "Down with police thuggery!" outside police headquarters to protest the arrest of labor leaders sympathetic to their movement for greater freedom and an end to official corruption.

The Beijing Daily said that 11 members of motorcycle clubs that participated in the demonstrations also were jailed.

Students continued their occupation of Tiananmen Square, triumphantly unveiling a 33-foot-high sculpture inspired by the Statue of Liberty in the center of the vast plaza.

Thousands cheered as the "Goddess of Democracy" — a woman holding a torch high above her head — was christened. The statue faced the portrait of communist China's founder Mao Tse-tung.

A core of about 10,000 students have maintained a round-the clock protest in the square, but the numbers swelled into the tens of thousands for the statue's unveiling.

The official Xinhua News Agency called the statue "an insult to the national dignity and image" and said it should be taken down by Thursday.

Indications appeared that the power struggle between hardliners who oppose political reform and moderates who back some democratic change had reached an impasse.

Diplomatic and Chinese sources said a meeting of the Ventrul Committee of the ruling Communist Party, scheduled to begin in about 10 days, has been postponed because the leadership is too divided.

The meeting was called to ratify purge of Communist Party chief Zhong Yizang, who last week reportedly was stripped of power. The Central Committee must approve leadership changes.

They said the conservative faction represented by conservative Premier Peng, had yet to gain the necessary support in the Central Committee to oust Zhao and others sympathetic to the students.

Sources said they believed that opposition to the purge was temporary and that senior leader Deng Xiaoping, who is masterminding the struggle, would make Zhao step down.

Americans think government corrupt, study says

Most Americans think the federal government is corrupt, according to a recent Media General-Associated Press poll.

A national survey of 1,125 adults found 70 percent believe the taking of illegal payoffs for special favors was widespread and nearly half of them called the government dishonest overall.

People have lost their confidence in the government because of its ethical and legal violations, said John Simmons, N.C. deputy attorney general. "One government official after another has been caught in some ethical offense," he said.

The Reagan administration, however, escaped most of the doubts about the government's honesty. While 43 percent said the administration had done a bad job of enforcing ethical standards, 40 percent said it had done a good job. The split was insignificant given the poll's three-point margin of error.

Fifty-one percent said the administration had done a good job of managing the government, even though most said the government was poorly managed overall.

Republicans strongly supported the Reagan administration while most Democrats rated it poorly. Many independents said the administration had done well on management, but they were split on ethical issues.

Fifty-five percent did not blame the administration for the Pentagon scandal, but 46 percent in the survey said former Attorney General Edwin Meese should have been charged with crimes. Thirty percent agreed with the decision not to charge him, and the remaining 23 percent had no opinion.

Half of the surveyed opposed the idea of a presidential pardon for former national security adviser John Poindexter, the highest official charged in the Iran-contra case.

Respondents were evenly split on a pardon for Poindexter's assistant, former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, who gained support through his defense of his actions at the congressional hearing last year.

Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis proposed higher ethics rules and sharply criticized the administration for its ethical performance several weeks ago. But the poll, conducted Sept. 6-14, found respondents split evenly on whether Dukakis or Republican nominee George Bush would be better at enforcing ethical standards.

Ethical leadership will make the difference, Simmons said. "The next president can make an ethical government and lead by example."

Gov't pay raise dies in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress voted Feb. 7 to take away its 51 percent pay raise and rushed the legislation. President Bush, who was expected to sign the measure before a midnight deadline.

Lawmakers were anxious to end public outcry against the $45,500 increase, which left them feeling, in the words of one representative, like "canon fodder for trash television and the radio."

First, the House voted to reject the raise by a vote of 380-48. Less than three hours later, the Senate followed suit by a vote of 94-6.

Although Bush had supported the raise, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said his boss "will abide by the wishes of Congress."

The congressional votes also derided large raises for top federal executives and federal judges. The Constitution forbids judicial raises from being scaled back once they have taken effect.

Some lawmakers predicted that defeating the judicial raises would accelerate the exodus of judges and federal managers from government service.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Bush told Senate Republicans Tuesday he might ask Congress to approve lesser raises for the judges and executives.

With its votes, Congress rejected raises proposed by a presidential commission and endorsed by then-President Reagan. Senators and representatives would have seen their salaries rise from $89,500 to $135,000.

During its less than 30 minutes of debate, the Senate heard Jesse Helms, R-N.C. and a foe of the raise proclaim that the vote shows the American people that "you can fight city hall and you can take on the Congress of the United States with all its legerdemain and all its legislative ability."

The Senate last week voted against the raise, but the wording of the resolution differed from the House version approved Tuesday. Sen. James Jeffords, R-Vt. who had voted against the raise, voted for it Tuesday.

Shuttle successful

The space shuttle Discovery, with a 200-foot trail of smoke following it took to the skies September 29 from Kennedy Space Center, after a two-and-a-half year hiatus for NASA due to the Challenger disaster in January of 1986.

The launch, originally scheduled for 9:59 a.m. was postponed until 11:37 a.m. because of high altitude winds.

"All problems were nominal, and the solid rocket boosters will be recovered tomorrow and thoroughly inspected," said Dominic Amatore, a spokesman for Kennedy Space Center.

The explosion of the Challenger was caused by sparks escaping through a gap in the casing of the solid rocket boosters. Since then, extensive changes have been made, Amatore said.

Space shuttle Discovery voyaged successfully two years after Challenger disaster.

"We added more insulation so that the possibility of that type of problem occurring again is minimal. Also, the main engines have been improved, the external tank has been strengthened, and a crew escape system has been added," he said.

This Discovery mission carried a crew of five veteran astronauts, whose main objective for the four-day mission will be the deployment of a tracking data relay satellite (TDRS), to be used by NASA to enhance communications with the shuttle, Amatore said.

"This mission is vital in getting back into regular flying," said Jerry Berg, spokesman for NASA at the Johnson Space Center in Houston. "An awful lot of work, effort and long hours have gone into this mission. It was inspected down to the last bolt. There was a good deal of tension in the air until things looked good. We have a great sense of exhilaration and elation to have the shuttle flying again."

Pro-choice demonstration

WASHINGTON (AP) — With cries of "choice" and symbolic coat hangers hung from their clothing, hundreds of thousands of abortion rights activists marched Sunday on the nation's Capitol hoping to influence the Supreme Court in a pending Court case.

"We're scared," said Ellen Davidson, a Yale University junior from Hewlett, N.Y. Scared, she said, because "we're coming to the realization that the thing we've taken for granted can be taken away."

The Supreme Court will hear arguments on April 26 in a Missouri case that pro-choice and anti-abortion forces agree could significantly alter the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision that gave women the right to an abortion.

"I'm thrilled to have my baby," said Kristin McNamara of College Park Md., as she wheeled 4-week-old Kathryn in a stroller during the march from the Washington Monument to the Capitol.

Marchers traded taunts with about 200 to 300 anti-abortion protesters who stood along Constitution Avenue. Police kept the opposing forces apart.

The anti-abortion activists set up a symbolic "Cemetery of the Innocents" on the Washington Mall containing 4,400 white wooden crosses and Stars of David. That, organizers said, is the number of unborn children killed daily since the Supreme Court legalized abortion.

At the Capitol, law enforcement authorities estimated the pro-choice crowd at 300,000. Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority, said it was more than 600,000. By comparison, some 90,000 people gathered for a March 1986 pro-abortion rally in Washington.

Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women vowed to "raise a political army" to ensure that abortion rights are protected. "If they (politicians) don't get the message, we will replace them with pro-choice."

Conflict continues in Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soldiers blew up four Palestinian homes and sealed five others Wednesday in reprisal for the murder of Arabs who collaborated with Israel. Palestinians hurled a grenade at a troop bus but missed.

Noting an increased use of guns and grenades by Palestinian activists, Israeli defense minister Yizhak Rabin suggested there had been a shift in Palestinian tactics from stones to more sophisticated weapons.

"Once they shift from civilian violence to terror for me is proof that they failed to achieve their goals by what they call the intefadeh," Rabin said, using the Arabic word for uprising.

Rabin, speaking to a Foreign Press Association, noted Wednesday's incident was the third time grenades had been hurled in recent days and that a village leader had been shot to death with an assault rifle by PLO enforcers.

He said terror attacks had declined in the occupied lands in the past 10 months as Palestinian activists focused on large-scale demonstrations and stone-throwing confrontations.

Palestinians sources said Yasser Arafat's PLO was not involved, and prominent Palestinians said they were not aware of any change policy.

"Whoever is behind such acts is definitely not on the same track as the PLO," said Jonathan Duttaoa, a Palestinian human rights activist.

PLO leaders have said Palestinian protesters had access to weapons but had been instructed not to use them in confrontations with Israelis.

Campaign criticism abounds

As the presidential campaigns face their final two months, candidates should concentrate on solidifying their positions rather than attacking each other, campaign officials and political experts say.

Republican candidates George Bush recently focused his attention on environmental issues, calling himself an "environmentalist" and pledging to deal with such key issues as acid rain and ocean dumping.

"The Republican Party as a whole has long championed the outdoors," said David Sander, an assistant press secretary for the Bush campaign. "The vice president is an environmentalist and has been for a long time."

Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis has a poor record on the environment, including allowing Boston Harbor to become tremendously polluted, Sander said.

Because the environment is a visible issue, Bush was probably surprised that Dukakis had not spoken out on it earlier, said Thomas Mann, director of governmental study at the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C.

The Reagan administration launched an "extraordinary assault" on the environment and it would have been an excellent issue for Dukakis to attack early in the campaign, Mann said.

Bush has dealt with the environment so much lately because he is weak on the issue, said Abraham Holtzman, a political science professor at N.C. State University. All of the environmental groups are against Bush, he said.

"The environmental issue is a way of differing himself from Ronald Reagan," said John Aldrich, political science professor at Duke University. "It is a handy issue to hit upon that emphasizes he is his own man."

In the Dukakis camp, the candidate recently reappointed John Sasso to his staff as campaign vice chairman. Sasso resign in September 1987 when it was revealed he leaked a tape to the press showing presidential candidate Joseph Biden borrowing from British leader Neil Kinnock's speeches.

"The move is an indication of a degree of panic in the Dukakis camp," said Gordon Jones, vice president for government relations at the Heritage Foundation in Washington, D.C.

The Dukakis campaign could not be reached for comment.

"Dukakis needs all the help he can get and he naturally turned to Sasso," Mann said, although he called Sasso an "inexperienced campaign professional" and said the reappointment would be a fairly minor episode.

The Dukakis campaign has been losing momentum, Holtzman said, so the return of Sasso was a smart move to invigorate the campaign. However, the reappointment will be a problem for some voters, he said.

"It's not a desperation move, but it is an attempt to jog the campaign out of its current defensive posture," Aldrich said. "That includes jogging the candidate himself."

Airplane rips open, nine die

HONOLULU (AP) — A failed lock may have caused the cargo door of a United Airlines jumbo jet to pop open at 22,000 feet, ripping a huge hole up the side of the plane and sending nine passengers to their deaths, federal investigators say.

Damage to the plane is consistent with the cargo door popping open under pressurization of the cabin as the jet gained altitude and atmospheric pressure outside the aircraft decline, National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) investigator Lee Dickinson said.

United Airlines Flight 811, carrying 354 people, had taken off Friday for New Zealand and was about 100 miles from Honolulu when the fuselage ripped open over the Pacific Ocean. Nine passengers were sucked out of the plane and are presumed dead.

The pilot lost power in one of the four engines and shut down another when a fire indicator light went on, but the plane returned safely to Honolulu.

Education level rising in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are more educated than ever, setting records for the share of people with high school diplomas and college degrees last year, Census Bureau reported in September.

More than three-quarters of people aged 25 and over have completed high school and nearly one in five has finished at least four years of college — both new records — the Bureau said in a new study on educational attainment.

The percentage of educated Americans has been increasing gradually over the years, as society places stronger emphasis on education, said Census demographer Robert Kominski.

"The entire post-Second World War era has been characterized by an expansion of educational opportunities and structures in the country," Kominski said.

"In the 1960s the civil rights movement added another level of opportunity. And the expansion of college grant and aid programs in the '60s and '70s allowed this to continue," he said.

Cartoon in 1995 Yackery Yack

Kenan Stadium was built by William Rand Kenan, Jr. as a memorial to his parents, William R. Kenan and Mary Hargrave Kenan. Construction on the stadium began in November of 1926 in the forest near campus. The stadium and accompanying field house was completed the following August, and the first game was played there on November 12, 1927 when Carolina defeated Davidson, 27-0.

At the end of the 1988 football season, Carolina's all-time record in Kenan was 187-123-15. The most points scored by the Tar Heels in Kenan came in the third game played there. Carolina whipped Wake Forest, 65-0, in the 1928 season opener.

When originally built, the stadium seated 24,000. Expansions in later years brought the capacity to 50,000, and, with the additions and renovations added before the 1988 season, Kenan Stadium seated 52,000 spectators. The cost of the most recent work was $7 million, quite a difference from the $303,000 Kenan spent to build the original stadium.

1,000 yards — that's the magic figure for any runner in football.

Call him a halfback, a running back, a tailback, an I-Back or whatever you want. But when he rushes for 1,000 yards, you simply call him something special.

Nowhere in college football have there been more special runners than at the University of North Carolina. In the last 19 years Tar Heel tailbacks have rushed for over 1,000 yards on 18 occasions. That gives Carolina more 1,000-yard backs than anyone else in collegiate history.

How has Carolina been able to produce so many 1,000-yard backs? Certainly, having outstanding runners has been a major factor. But other schools also have had great backs and haven't been able to compile the figures of Carolina the Tar Heels have had more 1,000-yard rushers than Alabama, Notre Dame and Penn State combined.

No, there are also other reasons, the most important of which are probably fine offensive linemen, belief in the I-formation and tradition.

The Linebacker Tradition

The most dynamic defensive player in the National Football League is Lawrence Taylor, the sensational linebacker of the New York Giants and another in a long line of standouts at that position from the University of North Carolina.

In 1986 Taylor captured pro football's most prized award when he was named the NFL's Most Valuable Player. That honor came after he led the New York Giants to a Super Bowl triumph.

Of course, Taylor's success has not come as a surprise to those who followed his great career at Carolina. And the fact that Taylor played for the Tar Heels was no surprise to NFL fans. Carolina has been turning out star linebackers for years.

The year before Taylor entered the League, the NFL's best rookie linebacker was Buddy Curry of the Atlanta Falcons. Curry had won All-ACC honors at Carolina in 1977 and 1979. He was a key figure, as just a sophomore, on a 1977 Tar Heel defense which gave up the fewest points in the nation.

Other Carolina linebackers to make the All-ACC team since 1970 are John Bunting, Chris Hanburger, Lawrence Taylor, Jimmy DeRatt, Bill Richardson, Mike Mansfield, Darrell Nicholson, Lee Shaffer, Chris Ward, Mike Wilcher, Micah Moon and Brett Rudolph.

THE CAROLINA CHOO CHOO

All-American Charlie Justice picks up yardage against the Rice Owls in the second quarter of the 1949 Cotton Bowl in Dallas, Texas.

Yackery Yack

There is an understandable tendency by sports fans to be wary when an athlete is called "the absolute greatest ever" or "the best who ever played." It is so difficult to compare athletes of the past with those of today that such descriptions are generally regarded as exaggerations of overzealous publicists.

Even with that in mind, however, it is undeniably safe to say that the greatest all-around football player ever to wear Carolina Blue was Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice.

Charlie Justice was more than just a great football player. He was a bonafide superstar . . . a hero . . . a legend in his own time. He had an impact on his home state as no other athlete had ever had before or few have had since.

During his four years in Chapel Hill, from 1946 to 1949, Justice helped guide the Tar Heels to three major bowl games. For one week during the 1948 season, Carolina was ranked as the nation's number one college football team. The Tar Heels ended that year rated third, the best finish in school history.

It is no wonder that he was held in great esteem by everyone in the state. Certainly, the time was right for a hero like Charlie Justice. The war had just ended and people wanted to turn their attention to more pleasant things. They wanted someone to make them forget the trauma they had just suffered. So they looked for heroes and they found Charlie Justice.

Coach Brown

MOVING FORWARD

Mack Brown accepted the position as head coach of the Tar Heel football team on December 15, 1987. The selection of Brown, 37, as the new coach was made by athletic director John Swofford.

Outgoing and personable, Brown was an immediate hit in his new job in Chapel Hill. On the field, he had been known best for helping develop some of the most explosive offenses in college football. As an offensive coordinator, he directed record-setting attacks at Oklahoma, LSU and Iowa State. He rejuvenated Tulane's sagging football fortunes in just three years, taking the team to the Independence Bowl in 1987 — only the fifth bowl game the Green Wave had seen since 1940.

But things weren't so good his first year at Carolina. The Tar Heels went 1-10.

In the eyes of some, however, Brown's start wasn't too bad. He was hired and assembled a staff at a relatively late date as far as recruiting is concerned, yet Brown was still able to salvage a good initial class of incoming freshman.

Carolina had another outstanding men's basketball season under Coach Dean Smith. The Tar Heels finished with a 29-8 record and won the Atlantic Coast Conference championship by beating arch-rival Duke 77-74 in the championship game. It was UNC's first ACC tourney title since 1982. In the regular season, Carolina finished with a tie for second in the league standings with a 9-5 ledger.

Carolina advanced to the semi-finals of the NCAA's Southeast Regional with wins over Southern and UCLA before falling to eventual NCAA champion Michigan 92-87 in an excellently-played game at Lexington, Ky. Besides winning the ACC Tournament, UNC also won the inaugural Tournament of Champions title in Charlotte with wins over Arizona and Missouri.

Carolina kept several streaks alive in 1989 — nine straight seasons in the Final 16 of the NCAA Tournament, 23 consecutive post-season tournament bids, 15 successive trips to the NCAA Tournament, nine straight years in the Top 10 of both wire service polls at season's end, nine years in a row of 25 or more wins and 19 straight years of 20 or more victories.

Individual honors went to senior guard Steve Bucknall and junior forward Kevin Madden, who were both second-team All-ACC. At the ACC Tournament, J.R. Reid, a junior forward, was named winner of the Everett Case Award as tourney MVP. He was joined on the All-Tournament first team by senior guard Jeff Lebo while Bucknall and sophomore forward Rick Fox were on the second unit. Reid also made the All-Southeast Regional All-Tournament team.

Old Rivals

No one really remembers when it began — maybe back in the '50s when Duke joined the Atlantic Coast Conference or in 1929 when Trinity College became Duke University — but the rivalry between the Tar Heels and the Blue Devils is anything but small. We met twice during the regular season, with Duke winning at the Smith Center and Carolina winning on the Duke home court at Cameron Indoor Stadium. The final test came at the ACC Tournament, when the two universities, located 15 minutes from each other, met in Atlanta.

Against an extremely challenging schedule, UNC's men's tennis team had a fine season under Coach Allen Morris's tutelage. UNC finished with a 17-9 record, 5-2 in ACC matches after going winless in the league the year before. Carolina finished second in the ACC tournament, its best league finish since tying for first place in 1978.

Named to the All-ACC Team were senior David Pollack and junior Don Johnson. Freshman Brian Jones was named the Region II Rookie-of-the-Year by the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association. In final national rankings by the ITCA, Pollack was 81st in singles and Johnson 92nd while the duo was rated 19th nationally in doubles. Pollack was also CoSIDA-GTE District III at-large Academic All-America selection.

LACROSSE

It was another banner year for Carolina's boys of spring as Coach Willie Scroggs' team made the NCAA Final Four for the first time since 1986. UNC went 13-5 overall and 2-1 in the ACC. In the inaugural ACC Tournament at Kenan Stadium, UNC beat Virginia 7-5 and Duke 18-6 to win its second straight ACC title. In the 1980's, UNC finished with 10 NCAA bids, eight NCAA Final Four appearances, five ACC titles and three NCAA championships.

The middle-aged white woman walking in front of me as I left Ntozake Shange's "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide/When the Rainbow is Enuf" turned to us and said, "Y'know, I should have brought my husband."

At the time, I simply laughed, but when I think back on it, she should have. In fact, every female should have been responsible for bringing at least one male, be him husband, boyfriend, brother or total stranger.

For Colored Girls who Have Considered Suicide when the Rainbow is Enuf

"For Colored Girls . . ." was, in fact, not just for colored girls. This forceful play reminded every woman, regardless of her race, that she had a right to expect love, respect and commitment in a relationship. It reminded every man, regardless of his race, that he had an obligation to meet these expectations, or risk losing a woman he loves.

On the surface, the play appeared to deal with the emotional and physical pains that black women have endured at the hands of cruel, irresponsible and undeserving men.

The Lady in Blue (Michelle McGill), for example, tells the story of her solitary abortion by writhing on the floor in pain. She screams about eyes crawling upon her flesh and metal horses gnawing at her womb.

More poignant than this scene, however, is the story of the Lady in Red (Benja K.). The Lady in Red, in a gossip tone, tells about Chrystal, a young woman, and her "man", Beau, a deranged Vietnam veteran who beats Chrystal and her two children. Chrystal grows tired of the situation and gets a court order banning Beau from seeing her and the children. Beau comes to the apartment anyway and threatens to kill the children if she doesn't marry him. The Lady in Red describes Beau dangling the children from a fifth story window and then dropping them to their deaths. At that moment, with her children screaming for her, she reveals that she is Chrystal. The Lady in Red drops to the floor, her body shaking with sobs.

The play includes several similarly heartbreaking tales involving everything from rape to infidelity. But the pain felt in these scenes is not exclusively reserved for black women. Black women aren't the only women who can relate to having an abortion without the support of a caring mate. Black women aren't the only women who have gotten involved with deranged men who threaten their lives as well as their children's. To be sure, if one alters the dialect and a few facts, the Lady in Blue could have easily been white; the Lady in Red could have been Oriental.

There is also common ground in the play when the women take stands by affirming their self-worth and refusing to tolerate abuse. The Lady in Red tells a lover that without any help from him she is going to end their affair. She attaches a note to a plant that she has been watering since they met telling him to "water the plant your damn self".

Certainly women across the spectrum of colors and backgrounds can identify with a scene in which a man, tail between his legs, offers infinite apologies. The Lady in Blue laments that she has so many sorries that she doesn't even have room in her closet for her clothes, and that the man can give his sorries to someone else. If these scenes crushed any overly sensitive male egos, then the play has done justice.

Although "For Colored Girls" sends an explicit message to women, the underlying theme offers a message to all society about what actions it reinforces in relationships by ignoring their universal existence.

ISSUES

by Ed Davis

Emotions ran high among UNC students Thursday night, March 30, when two nationally recognized experts debated the volatile issues surrounding abortion. With only weeks left before the Supreme Court was scheduled to reconsider the 7-2 ruling on Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision which made abortions legal in the United States, both sides said there was more at stake than just rhetoric.

Sarah Weddington, the attorney who at age 26 successfully represented Jane Roe before the Supreme Court in 1973, and Phyllis Schlafly, the conservative spokeswoman who led the successful battle to defeat the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, spoke before a vocal and responsive crowd of about 800 in Memorial Hall.

The debate was structured so that intellectual arguments were encouraged and heated exchange between the speakers would be unlikely, with each speaker taking 15 minutes to deliver her opening remarks followed by a 5-minute rebuttal by the other speaker. After the last rebuttal, the audience was allowed to ask questions. Each speaker was interrupted at various times during the debate and the question and answer period by applause, laughter, and hissing or comments of disapproval from the audience.

Weddington won a coin toss and was the first to give her opening remarks. She began by discussing her childhood in the small conservative town in Texas where she grew up, and detailed both her personal and professional involvement with Jane Roe in the landmark court case.

Part of the problem in getting an abortion case heard, Weddington said was that "no woman could stay pregnant long enough to get to the Supreme Court."

"Because of that case," she said, "abortion has since been a matter to be decided by the individual, and not the government."

She said that "no one knows who has five votes (necessary for a majority) on the Supreme Court," and that Roe vs. Wade could very definitely be overturned.

Weddington warned that making abortions illegal would not stop women from seeking them, but would instead force them to undergo the procedure at the hands of what she feels would be unsafe and poorly qualified practitioners.

Weddington said that as part of her research before deciding to defend Jane Roe in her bid to challenge the abortion laws, she found a number of statutes written to "protect the choice of the individual."

She cited the overturning of a Connecticut law which made the use of contraceptives in that state illegal. Weddington said that it was improper for a state to decide what a couple should be allowed to do "in the privacy of their own bedroom," and that the court's recognition of the "right of privacy in reproductive matters" went along with its current standing on abortion.

"We should not go back to the old ways," she said.

Schlafly called the 1973 ruling "the worst decision in the history of the court," and said that the worst case up until that time had been the Dred Scott decision of 1957, in which blacks were not given rights and pronounced as property.

She then drew a comparison between the current abortion laws, in which, she said, an unborn child was given no rights and treated "not as a human being, but as the property of the mother."

Schlafly also drew comparisons between Adolf Hitler's extermination of millions of Jews during World War II and the millions of abortions that have been performed since the 1973 Court decision. She said that the idea that "some lives are not worthy of being lived" was a common theme in abortions and the Holocaust.

Schafly described many of the details involved in the different kinds of abortion procedures, with the crowd becoming completely silent during her descriptions.

She said that "a spoon-shaped knife is used" in some abortions where "the fetus is scraped out." She also described what she called the "vacuum" and "salt poisoning" methods of abortions, vividly describing the procedures and their consequences.

Schafly also said that women are treated as men's equals in the Constitution, "and they always have been," drawing laughter from many members of the audience.

She said that there was nothing in the Constitution granting a right to privacy: "The Supreme court invented this right. They claimed they saw a right to privacy in the 14th Amendment."

During her rebuttal of Schafly's opening comments, Weddington said that when she had once spoken to former Sen. Barry Goldwater, he had told her that a "true conservative" believes that the government has no place dictating whether a woman has the right to an abortion.

She asked if eggs that have gone in-vitro fertilization have any legal rights, and said that the history of "legal tradition" suggests that the rights of an individual are not granted at conception, citing the constitutional clause giving rights to citizens "born or naturalized" in the United States.

In rebutting Weddington's statements, Schlafly said that a right to life is not limited to citizenship. She said that even though a foreign visitor is neither born nor naturalized in the United States, he or she still has all the basic individual human rights of a citizen. The same guidelines, Schlafly said, should apply to a fetus.

Schlafly also quoted a report, which Weddington later expressed doubts toward, which stated that only three percent or less of all abortions were performed for reasons related to the health of the mother.

Following the formal debate between the two women, the floor was opened to members of the audience, and questions could be directed to either Schlafly or Weddington.

Several questions or their subsequent answers elicited both cheers and jeers from the audience, with many people often hissing at certain points during Schlafly's responses.

Weddington drew the biggest laughs of the night when rebutting a statement by Schlafly suggesting that a fertilized egg has the same rights given a newborn child. Showing a relaxed confidence which Schlafly often lacked during the course of the debate, Weddington poked fun at what she said was a once-common idea that "it was wrong to 'spill the seed,' and you'd get hairy hands and go crazy if you did."

The last question of the night was directed at Schlafly, and it revolved around a woman's facetious proposal to set up a system of "pregnancy on demand," in which all men had vasectomies and a pregnancy required a withdrawal from a sperm bank.

"To me, that's the logical extension of refusing to have abortions," the woman from the audience said, drawing laughter and applause, "to have pregnancy on demand."

Schlafly responded by saying, "You know, last year there was a very popular movie called Fatal Attraction, and I think this shows what the liberated lifestyle has come to."

Many audience members shouted their disapproval of Schlafly's comment, but she continued, and the audience applauded her final point:

"To give to an individual the right to kill, I think, is a sad commentary. It's changed the nature of our civilization."

Responding to Schlafly, Weddington had the final word of the evening.

"I don't understand why some people are putting so much energy into trying to make women carry every pregnancy to term," she said, "when I see them putting no effort into making life better for those who are here."

The women did not shake hands at the end of the debate, and following the question and answer session, both women mingled briefly with supporters from the audience, shaking hands and answering questions, before returning back to the stage to speak in private with members of the press.

Weddington said that she and Schlafly debated each other, not always on abortion about four or five times a year.

"We ask the schools to pick us up in separate cars and have us eat at separate tables, and we do not travel together," she said. "Most of the speeches each of us do, we do separately, but I think debate is a very useful format. I think students get much more involved in it. That's what I like about the debates."

Weddington said that she felt that, in general, most college students were aligned with the "pro-choice" point of view, but she cited a debate at Notre Dame "where the audience was clearly not with me."

When asked to respond to a comment by Weddington that suggested that Schlafly's supporters were often more organized because of its ties to grass roots community and church groups, Schlafly said, "Well, I think we have a bigger following."

Schlafly said she didn't think "pro-choice" and "pro-life" were accurate names to describe the issues at hand.

"I'd call it 'pro-life and pro-death,'" she said.

Both Schlafly and Weddington did agree on two points: each has been, at some time or another, the victim of personal attacks because of the stand she taken on the issues, and each woman felt that men have a definite role in the question of abortion.

"I get mail from people who say things like 'I wish your mother had aborted you,'" Weddington said. "At one point, there were some very conservative legislators in Texas who said, 'You represent abortion and we're going to try to get you.'"

Schlafly said, "Some people are nasty — sometimes you hear some hissing and ugly remarks — but that's their problem.

"Under the current law, under Roe vs. Wade, the husband has no rights, period," Schlafly said, criticizing what she said is the limited role men play in the abortion issue.

"In most personal relationships," Weddington said, "the men are very much involved in the discussion. Women do have the final decision, but most women I know of do discuss it."

Weddington said that the term "pro-abortion" in reference to the pro-choice movement is a "totally wrong phrase, because nobody's for abortion. I think all of us are for life; it's how we define, 'When do legal rights (begin)?' and 'What are the rights of the fetus and the rights of a woman?'"

"The memory is a living thing — it too is in transit. But during its moment, all that is remembered joins and lives — the old and the young, the past and the present, the living and the dead." — Eudora Welty, One Writer's Beginnings.

The women some call the greatest living Southern writer is an unimposing figure in person. Small-boned, white-haired, bent with years, she smiles and blinks wide eyes, tries to put you at ease. Some 50 years worth of interviews (she is six months shy of her 80th birthday) haven't made her impatient with the process. She is warmly courteous, carefully dividing her attention among each of the reporters and the English professor who hovers like a nervous babysitter.

Her speech is inescapably Southern — low-pitched, in no special hurry. She pauses in the middle of sentences, making sure each word is just right before it comes out, soft at the edges, in her Mississippi accent. She has retained the rich dialect of her childhood, saying "further" for farther, and not relatives, of course, but "kin." She repeats "you know," not as a nervous tic, but to fill the space while she chooses the rest of her sentence.

"I think I was a late bloomer as far as fiction writing goes," she says. "I liked it, but didn't have any particular skill at it," as a child and a young woman. She credits understanding parents for setting her off in the right direction — reading to her, and always keeping books in the house. In her autobiography, One Writer's Beginnings, dedicated to her parents' memory, she has recorded a litany of beloved titles from her childhood: the books of Charles Dickens, Mark Twain, Rind Lardner; a child's encyclopedia called Our Wonder World, complete with a volume of fairy tales. She is a great fan of William Faulkner, a fellow Mississippian. She recalls buying his books used, when they were out of print, unappreciated in his own state.

Her own family was reluctant to let her leave home when she reached college age, so she spent two years at Mississippi State College for Women, close to home, where she wrote for the college newspaper.

"It was sort of frivolous stuff," she says. "Kind of show-off — bright things, quips, the kind of things you would write for your high school paper."

Her junior year, she transferred to the University of Wisconsin. Writing courses weren't offered at either school, so she studied English literature, an education she is glad of still.

She wrote on her own, but, she says, "It was a secret." Because of the shyness she says she's never lost, not even her family members saw those early efforts. "I think I was afraid of being laughed at," she says. But also, "I wanted a professional response. . . . I didn't want people to read it and say, 'Oh, I think that's just lovely,'" she says laughing. "If you sent it to an editor, an unknown person in a magazine far away, and they sent back something, you believed it."

Her neighbor, Hubert Creekmore, a published poet, advised her to look in the backs of best story anthologies for addresses of small literary magazines. She sent in a story called "Death of a Traveling Salesman" to Manuscript, a small, struggling magazine based in Akron, Ohio, that accepted the piece with enthusiasm. "That was the first serious story I wrote, and I was astonished when somebody would publish it," she says. "It was like playing the slot machine and the first one gives you the jackpot."

She speaks of the small literary magazines, numerous at the time, with great affection, lamenting their passing. "I don't know what I would have done if I'd felt that I was going to go on forever in the dark, without knowing — having any kind of response from the other end," she says. But I was lucky in that respect." Even before she became nationally known, most of her stories found homes among the small magazines.

"I didn't dream that a magazine like the The Atlantic Monthly would take one," she says, "and how right I was. It was six or eight years later that they took one." The best instance of what she calls luck may have been her stories catching the eye of Diarmuid Russell, a young literary agent.

She stops to spell his name out, without waiting to be asked. "I had a letter from him — he said, 'Would you like a literary agent?' I'd never heard of one." She became his first client, and it was The Atlantic Monthly that first published her work nationally, as a result of Russell's efforts. She found friends and friendly critics in Robert Penn Warren and Cleanth Brooks, who then edited The Southern Review. The rest is not just history, but legend, too. The young woman from Jackson, Miss., was befriended by writers such as Elizabeth Bowen, who delighted in her musical prose and unassuming demeanor.

Today, she seems as simply kind and pleasant as descriptions of her as a girl. She is delighted at any chance to turn the conversation away from herself to someone she admires. She has glowing words for past editors and friends, for Warren, Brooks, and particularly for Russell. She is generous in her praise of other writers. Her friend Elisabeth Spencer — did she nurture Spencer as a writer? "Oh, she didn't need any help from me." The usually reclusive novelist Anne Tyler, who went to Mississippi to interview her: "She was wonderful, she came all the way down to Jackson, spent the day and went back that day and wrote this wonderful piece. I just love her and her work."

Her modesty is a large part of her charm. She laughs at herself, insisting she hasn't much sense. She says of her first stories, "I knew I was too facile, but I didn't realize that things would get better if I wrote them over." Any chance she has those first stories hidden away for posterity? "God knows I hope they're not anywhere."

She reserves her highest praise for those who help young writers but doesn't see herself as qualified to do what they do. "I wouldn't advise anyone," she says. "I never did take any."

She remembers reslips — the "good" ones, that said keep on, try again. She never got discouraged, she says, "Because I had so many more where those came from. I mean, when you're young, your imagination works full-time." She corrects herself, "It does when you're old too."

She worked as a journalist to support herself in lean times. "You can't depend on selling a story," she says, "or even writing a story." The newspaper work, she says, was "Never anything responsible. In my day we could work on the society column and that was it."

Welty did spend a summer working for The New York Times Book Review. "That was a real newspaper office with office hours. You know, it was no more reporting on ladies' teas." Fascinating, she calls the work, but says it really had nothing to do with her real job of writing fiction. One habit that did carry over was that of putting together a story like the layout of a newspaper — cutting it into sections and putting the pieces of paper together in different order.

She is utterly without literary or academic pretensions. "Where does Edora Welty go from here?" someone wonders sonorously. "Me?" she asks, looking over her shoulder for some other Eudora Welty who might be asked such a solemn question. "You mean physically, when I go home?" she teases. "Oh, you mean what am I going to write next."

She is in the midst of a book of short stories, having interrupted herself halfway through to deliver the Harvard lectures that became One Writer's Beginnings. She wants to cut down on lectures and visits, staying at her lifelong home in Jackson to work. She likes speaking at colleges, she says, but "I get tired — too tired to write."

She has maintained her early allegiance to the short story as a form. "I never would have set out to write a novel. Every one I did happened because a short story got out of hand," she says. "Every time it's been against my will really. I really love a short story." Novels are difficult for her, she says, because "I can't write things and interrupt them."

She thanks the interviewers before they can thank her, autographing books in a small, illegible hand. "I'm sorry I've run on at too great length," she says, unnecessarily, then answers protests with a dignified, "Well, I appreciate your interest."

She is a very famous woman and many volumes have been written about her work and its influence, but if there is a secret to her gifts, it can be found in the slim book that dwells on her childhood years. She recalls falling asleep to the lull of her parents' voices at night, listening to and maybe half dreaming the stories they had to tell: "I suppose I was exercising as early as then the turn of mind, the nature of temperament, of a privileged observer, and owing to the way I became so, it turned out that I became the loving kind."

The chancellor's office isn't large enough to be overwhelming. It's a comfortable room, along the lines of what a parlor in Cobb's lobby must have looked like when it was new.

The desk at the far end of the room commands attention. It's big and wooden, its dark stain speaking respect. But the mounds of papers and folders reflecting the sunlight catch the eye first.

Chancellor Paul Hardin glanced toward the desk and swept his arm through the air as if by this magic gesture the piles would disappear.

"It's so depressing," he said as he headed directly to the embroidered fabric chairs at the other end of the room.

"This job that I have is 24 hours a day, seven days a week, quite literally," he said. "The weekends are just like the weekdays, and the nights are just like the days, especially in my first year, when I'm doing so much moving around trying to get acquainted, finding out what's what."

It's apparent why taking on the 22,000-student campus might have caused Chancellor Hardin second thoughts. Hardin comes to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill after a 13-year term as president of Drew University, a small, private university in New Jersey. Hardin's selection as the seventh chancellor of the University follows Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham's retirement at the end of the 1987-88 school year.

"I was really a reluctant candidate for this job," he said. "I was happy where I was. We were planning a major capital campaign, and I was being well-treated. I really was reluctant to leave."

But a long-time friend and a consultant to the University's search committee convinced him that he would be a strong candidate, the chancellor said.

"I think, in addition to being happy where I was, I doubted that I would be seriously considered. I think maybe you protect yourself from disappointment on things like that.

"I teased [the consultant] and said, 'Carolina is not going to turn to a Duke man. I'm not in a public university,'" said Hardin, who graduated from Duke University in 1952 and Duke University Law School in 1954.

After several interviews with trustees, other administrators and search committee members, the chancellor said he realized that the University considered him a viable applicant.

"I finally permitted myself to become excited," he said. "At that point it was easy to do so. I'm a native of North Carolina and an admirer of UNC even though I did go to another institution. But the idea of coming back to my native North Carolina and particularly to head this campus was terribly exciting — still is.

"I think the most exciting thing about it is I feel at home in this state and feel a sense of loyalty and commitment to this state. But second, I am an educator, and I like challenges. And I felt the one thing I hadn't done before in higher education was head a public research university with layers of responsibility and accountability and with some kind of political challenge. I found that intriguing. It's difficult, but intriguing."

At Drew University, the chancellor reported only to a board of trustees, while at UNC, legislative approval must be sought for changes in the appropriation of public funds.

"I feel that there is great commitment and strong talent at the various levels where I have to operate," he said. "I guess I'm optimistic that if we work hard and do good planning and have good leadership on this campus, then we will be able to get the support we need from the general administration and state legislature. I'm very encouraged with the early goings."

Aside from legislative concerns, the chancellor plans to devote much of his time to establishing an intensive planning agenda.

"This is a big complex enterprise and the several schools and units often plan well, but I think we have to get more self-conscious of planning as a whole," he said. "How do the parts fit together? What are our most pressing programmatic needs, personnel needs, facility needs? Which of those needs should we be taking to the legislature for public appropriations and which should we be taking to private sources in the bicentennial (fundraising) effort? So the activity that is going to take up more of my personal time over the next six months than anything else is working with other administrative, faculty and student leaders to intensify the planning."

Although many students view the administration as unconcerned with student concerns and the day-to-day running of the campus, Hardin said his emphasis on long-range planning will not keep him away from student affairs.

"I'm visiting all the schools right now in Arts and Sciences and the professional schools, spending two to four hours in each of the schools, and I'm very favorably impressed with what I find here," he said. "I want to understand each school and its mission. So I'm looking first at the school itself and what its educational, research and public service mission is. Then I'm looking at the key players, and I'm sizing up deans and faculty leadership.

"I have not had a chance on those visits to get acquainted with the student body because most of my visits took place before school opened and it's very, very hard to see that many people on one short trip," he said. "But I do, particularly at the graduate departments and research oriented schools, find graduate students and upper level people. I'm visiting with student leaders in other ways.

"I really do enjoy my contacts with students, and I particularly enjoyed my contacts with Chapel Hill students in the last several weeks. There are 22,000 of you, and so I can't have one-on-one conversations with all of you, obviously. But I am having an astonishing number of one-on-one conversations. I have enjoyed that. I have also just wandered down to Lenoir Hall I guess three times so far, and students have come up to me and spoken in a very friendly way."

The chancellor said he found it easier to meet students at UNC than at Drew because his office is located in the middle of the main quadrangle.

"When I walk from [South Building] to eat lunch or to have an appointment, I am right square in the middle of things," he said. "Most of the undergraduate classes are conducted within 100 yards of this office. And so, if I'm walking toward the Carolina Inn for a business luncheon or toward Lenoir just to see some students, or I'm walking to Franklin Street, I'm walking on the quadrangle and I see students."

In March, Hardin, who taught law at Duke for 10 years, stepped back into the classroom for a guest lecture at the law school. While president of Southern Methodist University in

Hardin

Morrah

Dallas, Texas, in 1972, he taught a full semester class. Since then, he has done only guest lectures.

"I taught the course on torts at the law school [at SMU] and it nearly killed me," he said. "I had to get up at 4:30 every Tuesday and Thursday morning to prepare for class and then stay up late to do mail and presidential work that I was not having time to do because of my teaching. As much as I love to teach and as important as it is to stay in touch that way, it just is not compatible with this job.

"However, the fact that I was a full-time law teacher for 10 years with no administrative title at all — just full-time teaching and research and public service — gives me a point of identification with faculty and with the students that I would not have if I had come into university administration through some other route. The fact that I came up through the professional ranks is very important. I've said to several people and to some audiences here that there is no danger I'll be confused about the main business of the university. It isn't conducted in this office. It's conducted in the classrooms and laboratories."

Hardin, who was installed on Oct. 12 during University Day festivities, was ranked by a national study one of the top 100 administrators in the country. The study revealed that the best administrators were those who had a dream for the university and those willing to take risks. The chancellor pleads guilty to being a risk-taker and revealed part of his dream in his installation speech. For both the dream and the risk, the chancellor said the planning process was the starting point.

"We've got to learn together what our strengths are, what our needs are. And then we move together to take some chances," he said.

While at Drew, Hardin initiated a program to issue personal computers to all students and faculty on campus. No other liberal arts college in the nation had tried such a program, he said.

"Therefore, since no one had done it and tested it, you could only guess how well it would work, but you couldn't prove it," he said. "Therefore, there was a certain risk incurred, when we raised fees and put a PC on every desk Five or six years later, we now know that it worked beautifully.

"You can't remove all risk, you just can't," Hardin said. "Some of these days as we plan together, we'll hit on some special things that we think ought to be done that may be brand new to Carolina. I don't want us to be too timid to go forward just because we can't prove they're perfect."

DISTINGUISHED TEACHING AWARDS

Dr. Junius H. Terrell, professor of accounting, UNC Business School

Nicholas Salgo Distinguished Teacher Award

For teaching excellence as evidenced by classroom effectiveness and ability to motivate and inspire students.

"Dr. Terrell transforms accounting, a subject many people find dull, into something dynamic and exciting. He encourages his students to move beyond being mere number-crunchers. He is always ready with an illustrative example to show us how our textbook material relates to reality. Dr. Terrell wants all of his students to become informed and responsible business persons. To that end, he devotes as much time as possible to discussion of current events and ethical issues."

Tanner Awards

For Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching

"He presents religious beliefs and traditions without bias. He is an energetic teacher and has an uncanny ability to relate ideas of the early centuries to examples from today."

Peter Kauffman, assoc. professor of religious studies

Eleanor Browning, assoc. professor of nursing

"Caring about students and their learning is the hallmark of an excellent teacher. Mrs. Browning is an exemplary teacher in that she conveys concern for both patients and students to the learner. She also encourages critical inquiry and independent thinking."

T. Wood, assoc. professor of speech communication

"Her effectiveness as a teacher and person is very influential and admirable. She possesses the rare and wonderful ability to integrate charisma and divergent thought with the utmost in academic respect and integrity."

W. Jorgenson, professor of chemistry

"I experienced his (Jorgenson's) organized and realistic method of teaching difficult material in a way that students could follow and understand."

Joseph C. Lowman, assoc. professor of psychology

"My first experience with his (Lowman's) innovative teaching methods was as a freshman in an introductory psychology course. He was a guest speaker with a twist: he had come as Dr. Sigmund Freud and fielded questions from the audience about Freud's experiences, theories and personal life."

ALPHA PHI OMEGA

Alpha Phi Omega fraternity was founded at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., in 1925. The Rho Chapter at UNC was chartered on May 19, 1930. Women were first admitted in the fraternity during the spring of 1976. APO's purpose is to assemble college students in a National Service Fraternity in the fellowship of the principles of the Boy Scouts of America as embodied in the Scout Oath and Law: to develop leadership, to promote friendship, provide service to humanity, and to further the freedom that is our national, educational, and intellectual heritage. Some of APO's projects include the book co-op, bike auction, campus chest celebrity auction, bloodmobiles, big buddy-little buddy field day, campus lost and found, Smith Center ushering, Kenan Stadium concession stand and weekly projects at Carol Woods.

CELLAR DOOR

Cellar Door is UNC's undergraduate literary and visual arts magazine, providing the only outlet on campus for student artists and writers to have their artwork and/or stories published. In addition to publishing one magazine each semester the Cellar Door holds poetry and prose readings open to all UNC students as well as the Chapel Hill community at large.

CLEF HANGERS

The a cappella singing group Clef Hangers was formed by four men twelve years ago to fill the need of a cappella music on campus. The group has grown to twelve members over the years, and is one of a few groups of this type in the Southeast.

The purpose of the group is to provide entertainment and enjoyment for UNC and other audiences while providing a fun musical outlet for the members.

The group holds one major concert each semester in addition to numerous performances in dorms, for UNC organizations, and anyone else interested in music. The group tours across the US in the fall and spring. Each year the group gives several charity and benefit performances.

THE DAILY TAR HEEL

The Daily Tar Heel has served the students, faculty and staff of the University of North Carolina and the citizens of Orange County since 1893. Publishing daily since 1929, The DTH remains the only morning newspaper published in Chapel Hill and leads the county in newspaper circulation with 20,000 copies distributed five days a week. It is the most comprehensive source of news and events at the University and also covers news of the communities in the Chapel Hill-Raleigh Triangle area.

One of The DTH's early editors was the renowned novelist Thomas Wolfe. The DTH has lived up to this esteemed heritage by turning out many fine journalists such as Roger Mudd, Tom Wicker of The New York Times, Charles Kuralt of CBS, pollster Lou Harris and Jeff MacNelly, the Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist. The DTH is an award-winning college daily. The newspaper is perennially rated "All-American" by the Associated College Press and has won the Pacemaker Award for the nation's finest college daily. In addition to the ACP, The Daily Tar Heel is a member of the Associated Press, N.C. Press Association, Southern University Newspapers, National Association of College Newspapers Business and Advertising Managers and the Chapel Hill/Carrboro Chamber of Commerce.

The Loreleis existed as a female a capella singing group many years ago (we're not sure how many years ago) but they disbanded. They were not started up again until five years ago by a student named Rah Bickley. The group got its name from the Lorelei, a mythical siren in Germany who sang so beautifully that she lured sailors to their deaths.

The purpose of the Loreleis is to provide the opportunity for women on campus to sing a capella (without instruments) with a group that is entirely student run. Though we have a faculty sponsor, students direct the group musically, run the practices, provide the public relations and manage the funds. The Loreleis also offer their services to any campus or community group that they can fit into their schedules. We would like to expose people to the possibilities of a capella music and familiarize the Chapel Hill community with the tradition of a capella music.

This year, the Loreleis sang for a variety of functions. We had both a fall and a spring concert in Gerrard Hall, and we sang twice in the Cabaret. We also sang with the Clef Hangers and three guest groups in the annual Harmony on the Hill. Besides these concerts, we sang at La Terrazza, at the Apple Chill Festival and for the School of Pharmacy. We also sang for a convocation on race relations at the Union. A group from the University of Virginia invited us to sing with them in a jam with other guests. In the past, we have performed for the Governor of North Carolina, at the natatorium and at the Smith Center before a basketball game.

Catholic Campus Ministry has existed on this campus since before the Newman Center was built twenty years ago. For the past ten years, students have assumed the role of Student Campus Ministers to pursue comprehensive and diverse programming for interested university students, faculty and staff.

Catholic Campus Ministry follows the purpose to continue programs in Roman Catholic Theology so that students may grow in their understanding of the Faith and to attempt to meet the spiritual needs of students by providing opportunities and activities to foster individual growth and community life.

Newman offers a wide variety of programs, from its weekly Wednesday student night with dinner and program; to retreats; human concern projects, such as Oxfam and Yoke Fellows; socials, including parties, movie nights, and a beach weekend; and campus related events, including a Homecoming float and participation in Human Rights Week '88.

THE PHOENIX

Well, the earth started to cool, and then the dinosaurs came on the scene . . . oh. The Phoenix started in the late 70s/early 80s when a disgruntled candidate for DTH editor started his own mag. The purpose of the Phoenix is to provide a weekly student news magazine to entertain and inform the general student population as well as to give students of all majors not just Journalism majors, a chance to work for a campus publication. We offer in-depth coverage of complicated news items and provide a forum for reviews, humor, essays, interviews and public opinion.

RESIDENCE HALL ASSOCIATION

The Residence Hall Association, preceded by the Residence College Federation, was formed in 1973 by a referendum on the student ballot. Its financial support comes from fees included in the room rent. Students have asked that money be collected each semester for area, hall and floor governments, the Enhancement Fund and the RHA budget.

The purpose of RHA is simple: to help people like where they live. This is done by being representatives of the residents on issues that affect them or the campus in general and by working to enhance and improve the quality of resident life through activities and workshops.

The RHA wants people to enjoy their times in dorms. That means cook-outs and mixers and assassin games and pre-game brunches. But that also means helping other organizations in their efforts to benefit the residents. RHA helps sponsor such projects as Race Relations Week, the Carolina Indian Circle, the South Campus Shuttle, Rape Awareness Week, and SAFE Escort. Through the various projects, RHA tries to meet the needs and wants of all residents.

SENIOR CLASS

The Senior Class structure dates back to 1890. Until 1921, the Senior Class President functioned as the chief student officer of the University. Today, the Senior Class is the only class to elect officers and marshals. The objective of the Senior Class is to promote class pride and University loyalty, enrich the lives of seniors, and provide leadership to service the needs of the University and the Class.

The Senior Class of 1989 participated in Commencement, Class trips, December recognition, Senior Week, the Senior newsletter, Voter Charity Drive, Athletic Action, Senior Buddy Program, Careers and Continuing Education, Senior Network, Senior seminars, Senior Enrichment Committee, Senior Almanac, Alumni Outreach and the Senior Class Gift.

This year's Senior Class broke national records with its fundraising drive for the Senior Class Gift. The Class of 1989 raised $343,000 in pledges from its members and received matching grants of $50,000 from the Educational Foundation and $167,000 from the State of North Carolina. The $560,000 gift will fund a "star" professorship which will be the nation's first student endowed teaching chair. The professorship will bring one of the country's top professors to Chapel Hill.

STUDENT TELEVISION

Student Television aired its first show on October 6, 1983. Since then STV has expanded to three weekly programs: Campus Profile, OFF the CUFF, and General College. General College, the youngest of the three, has been picked up by NCTV (National College Television) and is broadcast on college campuses across the nation. In addition to the three weekly shows, STV airs its annual Student Presidential Forum and presents music, comedy, and dramatic specials as well as working toward developing new shows such as Reelspeak (movie reviews), Carolina Crossfire (talk show) and Those Crazy College Kids (sit-com). STV provides hands-on, practical television experience in acting, reporting, writing, editing and shooting. They also strive to represent UNC, its students, and the Chapel Hill community as well.

JOHNSTON

UNDERGRADUATE SCHOLARS

The Johnston Awards Program was established at the University in 1971 by the trustees of the James M. Johnston Trust for Charitable and Educational Purposes. Johnston, a native of Orange County, N.C., instructed the trustees in his last will and testament to provide scholarship support to assist able students in completing their educational goals at the University. The Program recognizes outstanding academic achievement and leadership among students in the undergraduate programs and in the nursing programs. Ample financial resources are provided to Johnston Scholars so as to improve their educational opportunities and to enhance their future capabilities as citizens.

The John Motley Morehead Foundation administers undergraduates scholarship awards designed to attract outstanding students to study at UNC-CH. According to the Morehead Foundation Indenture, the presence of these students is intended to improve the quality of the University through the scholars' contributions to campus activities and in the classroom. Morehead Awards are based solely on merit. Financial need is not considered. Criteria include: evidence of moral force of character, capacities to lead and motivate fellow students, scholastic ability, extracurricular achievement and physical vigor as shown by participation in sports and other ways.

The Order of the Bell Tower is the student arm of the General Alumni Association. Order of the Bell Tower tries to stimulate undergraduate interest and participation in alumni. It serves as a liaison between students and the alumni. Since it was chartered in 1980 as an honorary organization, Order of the Bell Tower has gained recognition for its efforts to unify Carolina Students and alumni. The Chancellor named Order of the Bell Tower as the official host group for UNC. Some of the Order of the Bell Tower's activities are: Alumni chapter meeting, during which members meet UNC alumni and offer students perspectives; exam survival kits, providing parents a chance to wish students luck during exams; Homecoming and Commencement activities where members welcome returning alumni; members also serve as official hosts for the Chancellor's during pre-game socials and in the Chancellor's Box during football games; and publishes "Who New on Campus", a publication for incoming freshmen.

ORDER OF THE GOLDEN FLEECE

The Order of the Golden Fleece is the University's oldest and highest honorary. It exists to recognize and honor outstanding achievement in service of the University community on the part of the students, faculty, staff, alumni and others. The selection is carried out by the current student membership on the basis of three criteria: loyalty to the University, high character, and leadership which has significantly enhanced the University experience.

ORDER OF THE IVEY

ORDER OF THE OLD WELL

The Order of the Old Well is dedicated to the recognition of academic and extra-curricular excellence. Created in 1949, the Order honors students for their unselfish contributions to the University community. Each year the Order also undertakes research for Chancellor's Award nominees and sponsors a reception for the recipients of faculty teaching awards.

ORDER OF THE VALKYRIES ORDER OF THE GRAIL

Purpose of the Grail

"The purpose of the Order of the Grail is to preserve unity in our student life. Recognizing that the aims of the University can best be served by a student body sensitive to the values which transcend differences of race, creed, background and social station, the Order seeks to cultivate harmonious student relationships and democratic student life."

—Fred Weaver
May 9, 1940

A Statement of the Ideals of the Grail

"Among the various college organizations, the Order of the Grail is unique in that its objective, policy, and method is wholly unselfish. Its heart is consecrated to the service of others. And in rendering that service it has truly fulfilled the paradox of the Great Teacher, 'He that loses his life shall find it.'"

—Dr. W. S. Bernard
1920

Valkyrie Creed

As A Valkyrie I will strive:

To accomplish gladly and quietly the tasks which lie before me, to be unaffected by success and undaunted by failure.

To have an active interest in the welfare of my fellow students.

To act always with a spirit of helpfulness and to try to inspire cooperation in others.

To be sincere and considerate on all occasions, to work toward a tolerant and sympathetic understanding of others, and yet to stand staunchly by my own convictions.

To be above pettiness in all my dealings and to direct my thoughts and actions persistently toward the highest purposes.

As a Valkyrie I will strive constantly toward those ideals of character, scholarship, leadership, and service for which our organization stands.

KAPPA DELTA

Kappa Delta was founded on October 23, 1897 and chartered at UNC on May 12, 1951. It has 163 members and 3 pledges. The purpose of the fraternity is to promote true friendship among the college girls of our country by inculcating into their hearts and lives those principles of truth, of honor, of duty, without which there can be no true friendship. The KD motto is 'Ta Kala Diokomen: Let us strive for that which is honorable, beautiful, and highest.' Kappa Delta supports the Children's Hospital in Richmond, Va. with an annual donation of $10,000. The fraternity also supports the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse with the annual Shamrock Project.

SIGMA PHI EPSILON

Since its beginning in 1901, Sigma Phi Epsilon has grown nationally to 250 chapters in 45 states. Sig-Eps have continually maintained a strong presence on campus since 1947. The house they now occupy is one of the newest on campus, built with the help of Sigma Phi Epsilon alumni in 1983. The Sig-Eps field numerous teams in every intramural sport and are active in the Chapel Hill community as well, sponsoring a number of activities to benefit local charities. In the spring of 1982 they started what has become an annual event, the Sig-Ep 24 hour softball marathon. The tournament was rained out in 1989, but still managed to raise over $2000 to benefit the Ronald McDonald House.

TAU EPSILON PHI

TEP was founded on October 10, 1910. The First National Constitution of the Fraternity was ratified in 1916. In 1920, Tau Epsilon Phi became an international fraternity with the installation of Omicron Chapter at McGill University in Montreal, Quebec. TEP at UNC-Chapel Hill was founded on May 30, 1924, the 24th chapter to be installed in Tau Epsilon's national foundation.

THANKS

Many hours of hard work went into the preparation of the 1989 Yackety Yack. We would like to thank all the people who contributed and supported the staff. Special thanks are extended to the families of the Yack staff; Robert, Jeanette and Jennifer King; Sam and Rachel Morrah; Betty Dancy Parish and Joe and Jane Parish; Sherman and Kay Richardson; Dennis and Linda Sherrill; Raleigh and Acadia Bike; J.C. and the girls at the Yellow House; Amy and Keather; Michelle Harris; Todd Carter; Scott Sharpe; Bob Donnan; Ann Varley; Dorothy Berholtz; Charles Lockee; Cynical Man; Molly, Mitzi, Kitty, Dolly and Poochie; The Phoenix, Chris Kridler and Ed Davis; The Daily Tar Heel, Kevin, Stacy and Bill; UNC Sports Information; Papagayos Happy Hour; Will Owens and UNC News Bureau; Michael Sawchuk and Thornton Studio; Keith, Michele and Photo Specialties; WXYC; Matthew Plyler and University Camera; Carolina Coffee Shop; Fascination Street; UNC Photo Lab; Meridian Lines; Keds; Sally and Photo Synthesis; Paint Crayons; Margaritas; Pyewacket; Colonel Chutneys; Major John Yesulaitis, Allen Reep and the UNC Marching Tar Heels; SAFO; and Brian Hunter, Frank Myers and the Delmar Company.

COLOPHON

The 1989 Yackety Yack was printed by the Delmar Company of Charlotte, NC for a press run of 2,500 yearbooks. The cover material was black matte lexitone that was silk-screened in special mix inks. Cover art was created by Amy Lackey. End-sheets were Midnight 134. The 432 page book was printed on 80 lb. Westvaco Sterling Gloss Enamel paper stock. Headlines were typeset by Meridian Lines in Goudy Hand-tooled. Goudy Oldstyle and Goudy Bold were used for the remaining copy. Layouts were in part created on POL'R desktop publishing program. Black and white photographs were taken by Yack photographers and contributors. Greek and organizations photos were taken by Photo Specialties. Senior and underclassmen portraits were taken by Thornton Studio (18 West 27th Street, New York, NY 10001) B/W photographs were reproduced using a 150 elliptical dot screen. Color photographs were taken by Yack photographers and contributors. Color photos were printed by Delmar from individually laser separated DS#757 slide transparencies. Honorary art was created by Keather Weideman. Both Keather and Amy created the art for the divider pages. The Yackety Yack editors can be contacted for further information by calling (919) 962-3912 or by writing to Box 50, Carolina Union, UNCH, Chapel Hill, NC 27514.
